$25,400 Awarded A&T Engineering Professor For Research On Deterioration Of Uranium

GREENSBORO — A $25,400 research grant to conduct atmospheric studies on the critical metal, uranium, was awarded Tuesday to a professor in the School of Engineering at A&T State University.

Dr. Reginald L. Amory, dean of the school, said the one-year study will be conducted by Dr. B. M. Botros with funds awarded by the Union Carbide Corporation. A&T has been granted a special license from the state for the handling of the uranium.

Botros' research will be concerned with the effect of surface treatment on the rate of reaction of gases with uranium. The Atomic Energy Commission, which let the original contract for Botros' study to Union Carbide, is greatly interested in finding means of protecting critical metals such as uranium from rapid deterioration.

In his research, Botros plans to expose the uranium to different atmospheric conditions and analyze what happens, such as loss of weight due to erosion.

Botros said it is hoped that basic metallurgical methods can be developed to relate to this corrosive behavior.

Botros is a native of Egypt and holds degrees from Alexandria University and Sheffield University in England. He came to A&T after teaching at the

Desegregation Chances Fading; Negroes Made Gains During Decade

DURHAM, N. C. — In three related articles in the latest issue of "The Torch," published by the Department of Education at North Carolina Central University, Dr. Naren Tambe, editor of the newsletter, suggests that the progress made by Negroes during the decade of the 60s is slowing.

Dr. Tambe presents figures showing substantial gains in income for American Negroes, improved job status, an increasing share of the population, and more urban dwellers in a set of statistical tables labeled "Real Story of Negro Gains."

The statistics indicate that 35 per cent of American Negroes lived in the rural areas of the nation in 1960, while only 30 per cent are rural dwellers today. Even in 1960, 52 per cent of American Negroes were dwellers in the inner-city and today 55 per cent live there.

Fifteen per cent of the Negroes live in the suburbs today, as compared to 13 per cent in 1960.

In 1960, the Negro share of the population was 10.6 per cent. The census bureau's latest estimate is that Negroes make up 11.3 per cent of the population.

The most significant gains seem to be in education and income. In 1960, half of the Negro population had 10.7 years of school or less, while half of the whites had at least 12.3 years. The figure today, according to the census bureau estimate, is 12.6 years for whites and 12.2 years for Negroes.

In terms of income, 48 per cent of the Negroes in 1960 were in families below the officially designated poverty level, while only 23 per cent are in that classification today. Only eight per cent of American Negroes had incomes above $10,000 in 1960. The latest figures indicate that 21 per cent of Negro families are in that category.

Even though inflation accounts for a portion of the increase, there has been an absolute gain for the black wage earner. In 1960 the median income of Negro families was 55 per cent of that of whites, while today it is 63 per cent.

In the official census categories of occupations, the percentage of Negro workers holding particular types of jobs has increased in the semi-skilled and skilled worker classification, and in the professional and technical classification, with a large increase in the clerical and salesworkers category. In 1960 only nine per cent of Negro workers were clerks or salesworkers, while today 15 per cent hold that type of job.

There has been a corresponding decrease in the area of service workers (laundries, restaurants, delivery services, janitorial work, etc.), with small decreases for unskilled workers. Farm workers showed the largest decrease, with 12 per cent doing that type of work in 1960 and four per cent in the latest figures.

In his lead article, however, Dr. Tambe predicts that the Nixon administration "s likely to
