F.D.A. Approves Monosodium Glutamate

A controversy over the safety of monosodium glutamate has ended with a determination by the nation's highest scientific body that the widely used food flavor enhancer is safe for human use.

The Food and Drug Administration announced the clean bill of health for MSG after an extended study of current and past scientific research undertaken at the FDA's request by the National Academy of Sciences/National Research Council.

The FDA assigned the MSG study to the NAS/NRC body during the flurry of concern and confusion over food components and additives which followed the ban on cyclamates last fall.

The prestigious NAS/NRC appointed a special committee of leading food scientists and pediatricians to scrutinize the subject, and the committee reported to the FDA that there is no risk to man from the normal use of monosodium glutamate as a food flavor enhancer in the home or in industrial and institutional food preparation.

Monosodium glutamate is a substance which is derived naturally from the glutamic acid in protein foods. It has been used for half a century as a flavor enhancer by homemakers and food processors to restore flavor to its peak. Its safety had rarely been questioned until the cyclamates incident. Public attention focused on MSG apparently in large part because of the similarity in the sounds of cyclamates and glutamate, although these are two entirely unrelated substances.

One of the focal points of the controversy had been the use of MSG in baby foods, which baby food manufacturers had announced they would withhold because of public fears, although they considered it safe for use.

The final report to FDA cleared MSG from any restrictions of any kind. It commented that because the committee could not find any benefit from use of MSG in foods specifically designated for infants, it was recommended that it not be added to infant specialty foods. For all other consumers, the report said, "the flavor-enhancing property of MSG is considered to be beneficial."

The first suggestion that MSG was under fire came two years ago when a physician wrote to a medical magazine that he had experienced brief physical discomfort after eating in a Chinese restaurant. Several other physicians reported similar experiences to the magazine, and it was suggested that the use of MSG in soups and solid foods might be responsible.

Such experiences were characterized earlier this year by an NAS/NRC committee as of a transient nature, possibly oc-

ALFRED BLOUNT GETS FIVE YEARS FOR POSSESSION OF NARCOTICS

Guilford Superior Court Judge James C. Bowman of Southport, sentencing a young marijuana user Tuesday, said, "those who say marijuana won't lead to hard drugs don't know what they're talking about."

Judge Bowman made his statement while addressing Gary Lloyd Pugh, 21, of 408 Meadowview Road, who had pleaded guilty to having 24.85 grams (.870 oz.) of marijuana.

Judge Bowman said, "In no case — and I've tried several — where the use of heroin was involved did the defendant fail to say they'd previously been caught on marijuana. Those who say marijuana doesn't lead to hard drugs don't know what they're talking about."

He referred to a case on which he had just passed. He had sentenced Alfred Blount, 43, of 413 N. Dudley St., to five years in the state prison for having 15 packets of heroin at his apartment on Aug. 6. In addition to the heroin, police vice squadmen seized several needles and hypodermic syringes.

Blount pleaded guilty to the one charge, and Solicitor Douglas Albright elected not to prosecute several other drug charges against Blount.

Judge Bowman told Pugh he "could end up like the hard man I've just sentenced. That's how he got started . . . on marijuana."

Pugh was arrested Feb. 20 at the Meadowview Road address after a police search of his apartment turned up the marijuana.

Bowman sentenced Pugh to four to five years. With Pugh's consent, he suspended the sentence on payment of a $200 fine and costs, probation of three years and abstinence from any type of drug.

JOHNSON & EVANS REFUSED REVIEW BY SUPREME COURT

Two young Greensboro blacks, charged with public disturbances preceding racial confrontations here in May, 1969, lost their immediate bids for freedom Tuesday.

Nelson Johnson and Robert Evans were arrested on an order from Superior Court Judge James C. Bowman after the N. C. Supreme Court refused to review their conviction from the N. C. Court of Appeals.

The pair was jailed early Tuesday afternoon, but within two hours their attorneys began processing a final appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Johnson's attorney David Dansby, was in Raleigh late Tuesday working on the appeal. One of Dansby's associates, Alvis Lee, said an associate justice of the State Supreme Court had agreed to sign an order staying off the prison sentence pending final perfection of the appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Bowman is expected to enter an order for commitment to prison sometime today in conformity with the recent Court of Appeals ruling which upheld an earlier conviction.

If attorneys for the two are successful in obtaining a stay until completing the appeal, Johnson and Evans can be freed on bond until the Supreme Court accepts the case or denies a final review.

Judge Bowman of Southport, holding a term of Superior Court here, ordered the arrest of Johnson and Evans on Monday following notification by the State Supreme Court that it had denied to review the case.

Johnson and Evans were held in jail here Tuesday night awaiting some official action in their attempts for continued freedom.

The two were sentenced to 12 months in prison following a Guilford Superior Court conviction of disturbing the peace at Dudley High School in May, 1969. Johnson and Evans were named in a restraining order in May, 1969, prohibiting them — and 29 other persons — from disturbing classes at Dudley.

The Dudley incident later developed into a wider clash which erupted in gunfire at and near the A&T State University campus. Several police officers were wounded and one A&T student, Willie Ernest Grimes, was killed.

No arrests have been made in those shootings.

Johnson and Evans appealed their convictions to the N. C. Court of Appeals which reviewed the cases June 24 and issued an order upholding the convictions on July 6. The Appeals Court, however, reduced the sentences from 12 to six months for each defendant because the last General Assembly cut the maximum sentence for disturbing the peace to six months.

That ruling was then appealed to the State Supreme Court which refused to review the case.

Both Johnson and Evans, a former Dudley student, have been involved in civil rights issues among local blacks, especially younger groups, for several years. Johnson is more widely known.
