BREAKFAST IMPORTANT

By Maude Middleton

Home Economics Extension Agent

Recently I saw a bulletin titled "Bring Back Breakfast." For many of us breakfast hasn't gone anywhere. For some, perhaps, they never tried it in the first place, so there's nothing to bring back. Some office workers have allowed coffee break to take the place of breakfast—and some adults and children like to sleep better than they like to eat. One mother reportedly solved the situation by handing the youngster a hot dog and an apple as they went out the door. Which wasn't a bad breakfast. Neither is a hamburger and glass of milk. Add tomato juice and you've got the nutrient makings of a good breakfast. Doesn't appeal to me, or a lot of other adults, but what does it matter if they get 1/4 to 1/3 of their daily food needs.

Let me give you a 3 point
