G. T. I. Awarded $1,600 Per Year

President Luther R. Medlin of Guilford Technical Institute announced today that the Board of Directors of the Sigmund Sternberger Foundation has authorized an award to Guilford Technical Institute in the total amount of $1,600 per academic year for the funding of Sigmund Sternberger Scholarships. These scholarships are for Guilford County residents attending Guilford Technical Institute and enrolled in the nursing program there.

In advising Dr. Medlin of the scholarships, Mrs. Leah L. Tannenbaum, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Sigmund Sternberger Foundation specified that these funds are to be awarded to students, on the basis of need, who are enrolled in the nursing program. She further specified that the funds be awarded to two or more individuals for each academic year in such amounts as the appropriate committee of the Institute might determine.

In announcing the receipt of this award to the Board of Trustees at Guilford Technical Institute, Dr. Medlin reminded them that this is just another indication of the support the Foundation is giving to the school. It was, he told the group, the Sigmund Sternberger Foundation that bore the entire cost of the Second Annual Workshop in Counseling held at GTI during the summer of 1969. That grant of approximately $17,000 provided funds to bring to the GTI campus a highly qualified director and twenty-five school counselors from Guilford County.

Be A Smart Santa Claus

Have you ever thought about why toys are important? We know they are important because it gives grownups pleasure to give toys to little children, says Mrs. Rosa Winchester, Home Economics Extension Agent for Guilford County.

Toys are an important business in our economy.

But most important of all, toys and play equipment help children to grow up. How does it work? Toys are a necessary part of play; we need something to play with.

1. Children play because it is fun, just for sheer pleasure. Playing with toys helps children to grow physically. When they push heavy blocks and pull loaded wagons, they are strengthening those big muscles in their arms and legs and back. Playing with manipulative toys, like puzzles, peg boards, and things like that help children to develop the finer smaller muscles. We say they improve in dexterity. They are also learning how to reason, use judgment, and be creative.

Toys help to stretch the imagination. They can act out things they dream up, or ways they feel.

Sometimes they need to act out things that scare them, like going to the doctor's office. Or they may need to act out things they don't understand. It may be something that made them mad, you see children spanking their baby dolls. Or living again a pleasant experience, like eating in a restaurant. They'll have a tea party complete with a waitress. When two people play with a toy together, they are learning something about social relationships. It may be learning to share, or that I can play with the car when you finish. And is so much more fun to play house when you have a mommy and a daddy and a little boy besides. You remember from experience that children have the urge to explore, an insatiable curiosity. Toys are a good way to help them in their pursuits. Many hobbies and interests that we have in later life began in our childhood with toys.

In their play children learn the taste of success and achievement. Can you remember how proud you were when you finally put the puzzle together? Or when you had laid out a complete floor plan with sticks and branches, and you even made a brick seat for your guests?
