

CONSUMER ECONOMICS FOR THE POOR HIGHLIGHTS A&T GRADUATE OFFERINGS

The addition of several new courses in engineering will highlight the spring semester of the Graduate School at A&T State University.

Specialized graduate courses in engineering to be offered include electronics engineering, engineering research, management, organization, industrial economics and operations research.

Another special course to be added next semester will be consumer economics, to be taught as an offering of the University's Institute in Afro-American Studies. According to Dr. Albert Spruill, dean of the Graduate School, the course will emphasize some of the problems, difficulties and economic opportunities of low income families. The course will be taught by a member of the Department of Economics.

Graduate courses in chemistry will also be offered at the University. These courses were not offered last semester as the department underwent a complete reorganization.

Other offerings in the Graduate School will include courses in psychology and guidance. These will include educational and occupational information, personality development, introduction to counseling, and the guidance practicum.

Rounding out the program will be courses in agricultural education, biology, education, english, foreign languages, health and physical education, history and political science, home economics, industrial education, mathematics, plant science, sociology and social welfare.

Spruill said registration for the courses will begin Feb. 4. Additional information about the program may be secured from the Graduate School office.

EVANS STOPS MOPING, STARTS PLAYING

By Richard Moore

Now that Chucky Evans has stopped worrying about not being on the starting five at A&T, the Aggies' next opponents could be in real trouble.

Evans, a 6-5 junior forward, became somewhat irritable and moody shortly after an ankle injury benched him before the season started.

The lanky leaper missed the opening games and saw only limited duty in others.

"I just thought that I wasn't playing enough," said Evans, "but I found out that Coach Irvin was just bringing me along slowly because of my ankle. It was worrying me some, but I found out that he was right."

Evans served notice that he is healed in both mind and body recently when he came off the bench to spark the Aggies to a 98-95 victory over nationally ranked Cheyney State. He scored 20 points and pulled down 16 rebounds. The Aggies have been winning since.

Evans, a native of Atlanta, is the first to admit that the moping was not good for him. "I have a new outlook now," he added. "I figure I can come off the bench and give the team a boost. I am no longer worrying about starting."

He is even philosophical about his role. "You can learn a lot while on the bench," he said. "For one thing, I find I can analyze the situation better and know better how to handle my man when I get into the game."

Evans' return to the lineup should give A&T sorely needed rebounding strength. He is also a good ball handler and one of the quickest players on the team.

Evans believes that the Aggies' schedule is somewhat in their favor.

"We have six important games at home," he said. "If we win these and can win at least half of the road games, we should be in pretty good shape."

On Wednesday night, Jan. 13, A&T met Shaw University at Greensboro Coliseum and won 77-66.

The Beautiful Nightingale

MRS. OPHELIA B. SMITH

Mrs. Ophelia Betty Smith, age 50 of 501 Law St., died Thursday, Jan. 14, 1971 at Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital after a brief illness.

Funeral services were held Sunday, Jan. 17, 1971 at 1:00 P.M. from United Institutional Baptist Church, with the pastor, Rev. Charles W. Anderson, officiating. Burial was in Piedmont Memorial Park.

The Rev. Mrs. C. W. Anderson gave the eulogy in which she stated that Mrs. Smith was a Beautiful Nightingale. This name was first given her by the late Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown who pictured her graduating class in Nursing as the Beautiful Nightingale. Mrs. Smith was a wonderful worker of God. She never said no when called upon to render a service. She was a faithful nurse at the L. Richardson Hospital for 29 years, a faithful church worker and a faithful community servant who would always greet you with a smile. Ophelia's mother died when she was at an early age. She and her two sisters were brought up by their father. Rev. Mrs. Anderson pictured the whole family in her eulogy beautifully.

Survivors are: husband, Arlando H. Smith; two daughters, Miss Sharon Smith, of the thing about skin color that gets us up so tight that we can't get over it."

Sammie Chess of High Point, David Atwood, director of the Community Services, Dr. Melvin G. Stahl, associate superintendent of the Guilford County Schools and Dr. Lois Edinger of UNC-G.

Sunday School Lesson of separation are broken down only at a price. Bishop James K. Mathews has said, "Reconciliation is . . . entering into painful identification with the lot of the least man; being unready to be made whole while he is fragmented."

There is a growing need for persons who are willing to put their comfort and security behind them and cross the lines of poverty and despair. Increasing numbers of Christians can live in one world while having the imagination and courage to cross over into another world and identify with the homeless and the disadvantaged.

Examples of such a life may be commonplace on the surface but far-reaching in consequences. A housewife and mother of five spends three days a week without pay helping children in a black school with their reading. A husband-wife team of doctors, retiring early from a busy practice, opened the first mission hospital in Nepal.

Such are the signs of reconciliation in a broken world, quiet as a blade of grass growing, unspectacular as new tissue replacing old. What can we do to bring about such new life where we are?

O God of mercy and reconciliation, forgive our sins against the cause of love in the world. Lead us beyond the hostile walls that divide us and usher in your reign of justice and peace.

Amen.
