A&T Trustees Elect Two Graduates To State's Higher Education Board

The A&T Board of Trustees elected two representatives to the newly-created Board of Governors, which will control North Carolina's system of higher education. Elected at a special meeting of the Board were Dr. Andrew A. Best, a physician in Greenville, and Howard C. Barnhill, a health administrator with the Mecklenburg County Health Department's Model Cities Program.

Barnhill and Best, both A&T graduates, will be two members of the 32-member Board of Governors which will coordinate and control the entire system of higher education at the state level for all 16 institutions. A&T and North Carolina Central are the only predominantly Black universities that will have two representatives each of this board.

"We are extremely pleased with the election of these representatives," said Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, president of A&T. "Both of them have served the university well over a number of years." There was sentiment to select John S. Stewart, current chairman of A&T's local board, as a representative to the Governor's Board. Stewart, however, told the body that he felt he could be more effective serving the local board and providing the benefit of his having served on the original committee which recommended restructuring.

Barnhill served a number of years as president of the A&T General Alumni Association and more recently as a member of the local board of trustees. Dr. Best was only recently renamed to the local board of an eight-year term by Governor Robert Scott. Their election to the Governor's Board has created two vacancies on the A&T Board.

Earlier this week, Governor Scott also announced the appointment of Dr. Lacy Caple as a new member of the local board and the reappointment of

Easter Seal Society Advises Toy Shoppers

A parent can avoid the frustration of seeking his child's Christmas toys deserted in the corner by New Year's eve while the child clings to a ragged but cherished doll or truck.

The sophisticated battery-operated mechanism which climbs, walks, flashes, talks and whirs is not necessarily the answer to capturing the child's heart. According to a research study conducted by the National Easter Seal Society, simply pressing a button and watching a toy perform will not hold a child's interest for long. A toy with more enduring appeal is one in which the child actively participates in the toy's function.

Many of the inexpensive standards of the toy industry remain tops in the area of child appeal. In addition, many of these same toys are an effective means of developing motor skills in both handicapped and non-handicapped children.

Popular amongst the pre-school and early school set is the take-apart and put-together toy. This group includes the tinker
