A&T SCHOOL OF NURSING WINS NATIONAL ACCREDITATION

By Richard Moore

The School of Nursing at A&T State University Monday was granted accreditation by the National League for Nursing, the highest evaluating agency for nursing education.

Announcement of the school's accreditation was made at a press conference this morning by Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, president of the University.

Dowdy was notified Monday by Dr. Dorothy Osimek, secretary of the League's board of review in New York City.

The accreditation of A&T's baccalaureate nursing program came on the heels of a week-long evaluation by the board of review during October.

Dr. Osimek's letter said in part:

"The National League for Nursing's board of review for baccalaureate and higher degree programs voted to grant initial accreditation to the baccalaureate degree programs in nursing." She said the board's comments and recommendations will be sent to A&T in a few weeks.

Dr. Osimek said the initial accreditation is granted for a period of eight years.

"This is a signal achievement that has come to our college," said Dowdy. "It will give us expanded opportunities to make a greater contribution to the health services professions of the state and the nation. The accreditation of our School of Nursing was hastened by a gift from the Kellogg Foundation and the untiring efforts of our dedicated faculty. We shall immediately proceed for the upgrading of other academic programs."

In receiving its new honor, the School of Nursing became the second major A&T academic division in recent years to earn national accreditation.

The School of Engineering and its three departments were fully accredited by the Engineers' Council for Professional Development (ECPD) in the summer of 1969.

The current dean of the School of Nursing is Mrs. Naomi W. Wynn, a graduate of Hampton Institute and the New York University.

The faculty consists of 10 professors, all with advanced degrees in the nursing field. There are 185 students, both male and
