VOLUNTEER ACTION CENTER ACHIEVES A FIRST IN NORTH CAROLINA

The Voluntary Action Center of United Community Services has achieved a first in North Carolina in the area of service to volunteers, to organizations utilizing volunteers and to its community.

The VAC has been notified by Edwin D. Etherington, president of the National Center for Voluntary Action, that it has been chosen one of 51 "model Voluntary Action Centers" in the nation and is the first and only one in North Carolina to receive this designation.

In announcing the affiliation with the National Center for Voluntary Action, Etherington said, "Your program serves your area well. It serves, too, as an example that can spark similar efforts in other communities throughout America."

Mrs. Clement G. Wright, chairman of VAC here, said this affiliation gives "the Greater Greensboro area the opportunity to be part of a nationwide effort to better utilize the volunteer resources within individual communities and thus the country as a whole."

The broad purpose of the National Center — an independent, non-profit, non-political agency — is to support people and their independent agencies locally and nationally. The center is funded by grants from private foundations.

"The national center," Mrs. Wright said, "hopes to foster and support a network of Voluntary Action Centers coast to coast as the foundation and lifeline of a national renewal of the volunteer spirit. The independent impulse for solving public problems through private initiative is at the heart of the American tradition."

The local VAC grew out of a reorganization of the former Volunteer Bureau of UCS. Its director is Miss Chrys Constable, and it is an operating department of UCS and receives its support from the community through the annual United Campaign.
