Ph.D. Honored at A&T Finals

Dr. Reginald Amory, dean of the School of Engineering at A&T State University, was recently awarded the university's first Excellence Award for administrators.

Amory's citation, including a check for $500, was presented by Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, president of A&T.

Dowdy said The Excellence Award will be presented every other year to the administrator who best exemplifies the university's constant pursuit of excellence in all things." On alternating years, the award will go to two outstanding faculty members.

In his remarks, Dowdy paid tribute to Amory as an administrator. "His sensitivity and his keen awareness of the changing educational scene and of the problems and aspirations of this particular university, enable him to function at the highest level of proficiency," said Dowdy.

Dowdy said Amory, 35, was especially cited by the selection committee for his outstanding program of faculty recruitment and development, for his ability to attract supporting funds from firms and industries and for his leadership in vitalizing the school's research program.

The committee noted that since Amory became dean in 1968, the school's research value has increased from $3,000 to nearly $500,000.

Amory has guided the School of Engineering to national accreditation by the Engineering Council for Professional Development (ECPD). The school has also initiated a master's degree program in engineering.

"His innovative approach to education and his interest in the students, make him a valuable asset to this university," said Dr. Glenn F. Rankin, dean of academic affairs.

Rankin said that when Amory arrived at A&T, the School of Engineering had only one other doctorate. More than 60 per cent of the school's faculty members now hold Ph.D. degrees.

A native of Peekskill, New York, Amory is a graduate of the New York University. He holds advanced engineering degrees from Clarkson College of Technology and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

A&T SUMMER SPORTS PROGRAM INVOLVES 650 AREA YOUNGSTERS

A summer enrichment program involving 650 youngsters of the Greensboro area was initiated last Monday at A&T State University.

This is the fourth time that A&T has been selected as a site for the National Summer Youth Sports Program, sponsored by the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports and the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

"Last year our program was considered to be one of the model programs in the nation," said Dr. Roy D. Moore, director of the A&T project. "This time we plan to involve many segments of the community in providing educational and enrichment experiences for these youngsters."

A&T's five-week program is being operated on the campus five days a week through July 7 from 12:30-5:30 p.m.

Moore said this year's program will involve the efforts of a number of community agencies. "The Red Cross will instruct the youngsters in the techniques of first aid and some of the churches are providing us with their busses with which to transport the youngsters, he said.

He said that pickup stations will be established at six different public housing areas.

The basic components of this program will be basic instruction in sound personal health practices and career opportunities, a comprehensive program of instruction in team and individual sports and a hot meal for all participants at the end of the day.

Moore said the program will also provide a medical screening for all youngsters in the program. Significant health

C.O.C.A.R. JUBILANT OVER ANGELA DAVIS' ACQUITTAL

NEW YORK, June 9 — The following statement was released today by the United Presbyterian Council on Church and Race:

The acquittal of Angela Davis on June 4 was an occasion for quiet jubilation and sober reflection by the United Presbyterian Council on Church and Race which made a grant of $10,000 to the Angela Davis Defense Fund on March 15, 1971. The COCAR grant, made to help assure a fair trial, was widely interpreted across the church as unwise. It triggered a protracted controversy among United Presbyterians concerning the use of denominational funds for legal assistance to the Black radical.

Despite the subsequent opposition of many Presbyterians a considerable segment of the church held firmly to the COCAR position that in the climate of anti-communist and racist hysteria surrounding the case, there was room for reasonable doubt that Angela Davis would receive a fair trial. She did receive a fair trial and the American judicial system has proved once again that it can operate fairly for all people.

It seems clear, however, that the outcry from the black community and the worldwide attention given the case served to expose to public view the fact that Angela Davis' arrest and incarceration had more to do with her race and politics than with clear evidence of guilt for the crimes charged.

The United Presbyterian Church played a contested, but significant part in helping to open up the fair trial question in the Davis case, and with the exception of the Y.W.C.A., was the only major religious institution in the United States to do so. Following the announcement of the acquittal Mr. J. Henry Neale, Dr. Edler G. Hawkins, co-chairmen, and Dr. Gayraud S. Wilmore, staff executive of the Council on Church and Race, made the following joint statement:

"COCAR is deeply appreciative of the many ministers and laymen who supported the Council during the Angela Davis debate which came to an end with the recent vote of confidence given to COCAR by the 184th General Assembly in Denver. The discussions in our
