BIRDS OF ALLEGHANY CO.

CHUMMING WITH THE WINTER WREN

(By Claude J. Smith.)

It is now October. Frost covers the ground. As we go along observing the birds that are willing to make themselves known on a cold morning we are apt to overlook a small, dark brown bird, that fits suddenly under a nearby brush heap, and from that point of vantage begins scolding us.

This is the winter wren, who has just reached Piney Creek on its journey to the Gulf States. The date is October 10. For the last three years the date of arrival of this small wren has varied only two days. We see this wren from now until December; then in March and April we see it as it goes to nest north of the United States. I usually meet with this interesting little insect-destroyer in woods near a clear, rippling brook, where there is an abundance of moss and tangled underbrush. However, last November I made a quite different discovery of its habits. One cold, frosty morning, as I was splitting stove-wood, I glimpsed something dart into the pile of wood I had already split.

I was puzzled as to what it was. Creeping stealthily around to where I could peek over the wood, what did I see but a winter wren, creeping about among the sticks, evidently in search of spiders, these making a large part of their food. Of all our wrens, I was thrilled to know that I had gotten so close to the shyest of wrens; becoming as near motionless as it is possible for a boy to be, I waited to see what the wren would do. I watched about ten minutes, in which time the wren came to within 3 feet of me, entirely unmindful of my presence. On March 20, 1933, I heard the song of this bird for the first time. Its notes are very exquisite and melodious, vivacious and seeming to come from the very heart of the singer. It breeds from northern U. S. north to the fur countries. It is said to place its nest in deep moss beside a rippling brook, laying creamy white eggs. The nest is bulky, as is that of all wrens. I have seen this bird dive into a small stream when the borders of it were frozen over. It is remarkable how this wren, only 4 inches long, can travel from the Gulf to the fur countries and back twice a year, but, as Darwin says, some phases of nature are obscure and little known.

The old colored farmer was not a preacher, but he could get at the gospel truth in a very effective way, as the following incident discloses most clearly:

A white man asked our farmer friend what church he belonged to and the old man replied: "Bress Ye, sah, dah's fo' roads leading from hyah ter town—de long road, de hill road, de sho' road, and de swamp road—but when Ah goes ter own wid er load er grainload er grain dey don't say ter me, 'Uncle Calhoun, which road did yo' come by?' but, 'Cal, is yo' wheat good?'" in connection with proposals submitted to the agricultural adjustment administration for consideration and action.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AIDS CATTLEMEN OF SECTION

"On September 8 a hearing was held on the so-called packers' code. The Denver committee as well as the other cattle representatives attended that hearing and offered suggestions to be included in a marketing agreement with processors. A committee of the cattlemen also called at my office on September 7 and we discussed various proposals that might be adopted by the administration. It is our hope we will be able to accomplish something for the cattle industry and work out a plan of action for cattlemen that will fit with our proposed plans for the dairy industry and also with the long-time corn-hog program."

If the plan agreed upon by representatives of the growers and presented by Senator Byrd to Administrator Hopkins is adopted, the government will enter the markets as a buyer, bidding in the inferior beef offerings and removing them from the market. White Litton's suggestion is for the conversion of these cattle, into non-edible products, it is the suggestion of others that purchases by the relief administration be converted into food, to be distributed in relief channels. In either case, the government-acquired beefs would be removed from ordinary consumer channels thus stimulating demand for other cattle.

Senator Byrd has been extremely active both in correspondence and conference with Virginia growers, and has made diligent efforts to ascertain and impress their views as to the most promising method of relief. So far as the Old Dominion is concerned, he has led the fight for cattle-growers' relief. — Roanoke Times.
