Men Wanted for The Marine Corps

It is announced that a limited number of young men will be accepted for enlistment in the Marine Corps during the month of November—young men between the ages of 18 and 30 years of age, white, single, of good moral character, and of sound physique. Men having previous military service will be accepted up to 35 years of age. Captain Greer states that young men who enlist now have an excellent opportunity of completing or furthering their education, or to learn a trade that would be a great help to any young man in earning his livelihood after he has left the Corps and returned to civilian life. The Captain points out that the Marine Corps offer more than 200 courses through the Marine Corps Institute. These courses are free to every young man who enlists in the Marine Corps.

If interested write or call in person at the Marine Corps Recruiting Station, 238 Post Office Building, Winston-Salem.

Traveling Around America

LOADING FINGERS AND HANDS

THESE longshoremen, believe it or not, are loading thousands of fingers and hands into the holds of a Grace Line ship in Guayaquil, Ecuador. We're speaking of bananas, of course. In the trade—bunches of bananas are known as stems. Each bunch is made up of "hands" or clusters, having ten to twenty "fingers," as the individual bananas are called. Only those with six or more "hands" usually are considered marketable, and they fall into classes known as sixes, sevens, eights and nines, though many times bunches contain more than nine hands. The handling of the "stems" is of the utmost importance for when the fruit is harvested it is still alive—drawing nourishment from the stock, with sap still flowing and tissues changing as the ripening process continues. Close timing is observed all along the way from the picking of the fruit to its delivery to the far-away neighborhood store. With correct timing the fruit does not reach the port for loading until the ship is ready to receive it. If the banana trains or trucks or barges do not proceed direct to the dock, long chains of natives pass the "stems" rapidly to the ship. The bunches are quickly but thoroughly inspected again, then placed on conveyor belts which carry them to the holds where experienced laborers receive them, carefully stow them in the bins to which each class belongs—with foremen overseeing the work and counting the bunches in each class. The "stems" usually are placed in three tiers—two standing and one flat, or vice versa, so that the air can circulate between them. As soon as the hatches are battened down the temperature is reduced as quickly as possible, by refrigeration, to 57°F., a temperature which is maintained throughout the voyage. The holds also are well ventilated for vitiated air is quite as harmful to the banana in transit as heat and humidity. After the fruit is all tucked away stowage plans are drawn up showing the location and quantity of the various classes, so that no time need be lost in speeding the bananas to their final destination when they reach the end of the voyage.
