I mounted the horse, rode to the edge of town, tied him and went up to Market street, bought a fifty pound box of tobacco, took it on my shoulder, went back, mounted my horse and put off for camp. I knew the Captain would ask me after Bridgers' health and I concluded I better see him before I went back, so I rode by his house and told him what I had done and made things straight with him, and carried the tobacco to the men. In a few weeks it was out again and I asked the Captain to let me go after clothes to go with it, and Betty not more tobacco. He says "sergeant, if you will promise to do just as you ors, but she had made the Phi Mu did before you can go." ### The Coach

By BEN AMES Associated Newspapers.

rick decided, to lose one's girl and flunk one study without a perfeetly fatuous coach coming along to bawl one out in front of the team and make a general nuisance of himself nosing into affairs that were none of his business! Just as if one wasn't likely to flunk an exam. Or stay out late a few nights. Life. he decided, had deteriorated to a even see his girl and go to a few shows without getting posted. Most

Diana was always gay, he reflected; he couldn't recall ever having seen her cross or impatient with him, or with any one for that matter. She made all her classes regularly and kept a fairly decent average, although the times she was called down in class for unpreparedness was noticeable. But did she answer back? Not so you'd notice it. Di wasn't the crabby sort. If any one wished to think harshly of her they were welcome, for all she cared! Of course, Di wasn't anything like Betty. Betty was poor and had no sport car or sporty only won wonderful marks and hon-Epsilons as well, besides being a guard on the basketball team and Has Broken Leg at New Bern. Despairing of getting never did let the Captain know that a runnerup for the tennis championship of the school. And the greatest city, for he would have given me difficulty with Betty was that she expected too much of a fellow. Not the sort of things Di expected; not candy and movies and dances and dinners. Rather, Betty expected him to go out and win his letter the first year by spectacular play; or win such high marks that he got some sort of medal.

And so he smiled warmly upon Di and reluctantly admitted that he had to stay in and bone up on English, adding that the fool coach threatened to remove him from the team if he got another seventy!

"Why, you poor lamb, you!" exclaimed Di in her high, shrill voice. "Come over to my flat and have a bite to eat and let's talk it over."

But Betty. Gee, Betty was different. Betty wouldn't let you have on me so strong that when I got to a sandwich and cake and ginger ale plus in the afternoon, not much! She'd dig out a few oranges and some other fruit and advise adherence to diet rules as per the coach.

And Betty wasn't wise to herself the way Di was. Betty was unashamed of the dusting of fine golden freckles across the bridge of her small nose; she called them tennis eroir de guerres. And she never used powder or rouge or any other

Somehow most of Betty was uncomfortable, he decided. For Di did not play tennis; it was messy! She hated golf; one had to practice too much. Riding horseback was too hard. And swimming-ugh! Eels and fish and bugs. So Di did none of them-much too messy. And Roger basked in the comfortable warmth of her smile without regretting too much his break with

At seven he started home toward the boarding house where the crew lived, his thoughts happy and his mind pleasantly exhilarated by the plus ginger ale, and at Elm and Center streets an orange car whizzed out from the murk of the avenue where Di lived and he felt a sharp pain and then started falling immeasurable distances through space. Di had run over him going at fifty-mile speed-it was too much trouble to watch out for every jay. walking pedestrian.

He awoke in the college infirmary and Betty sat beside him holding his hand tightly with one hand and holding a Latin grammar and grinding out passages of Virgil from a book propped on a chair in front of her. He was conscious of a great weight lifted from his heart and mind and vaguely recalled having talked a great deal-wondered if he had been delirious. After a while he thought of Diana and he wondered why he wasn't disappointed not to care any more for her. and then it struck him as ludicrous that he should know that he didn't care for her without arriving at the decision through the usual devious method of thinking. Betty saw that his eyelids were fluttering; he couldn't fake unconsciousness any more, so he opened his eyes and asked what happened.

"A girl ran you down over on Center street-only a slight scalp wound, Rog; you can get right after your English tomorrow. And it may save your life—this week in

"You darned little coach!" he muttered, bringing her hand up to his lips. "All you do is worry about me and my grade," and his eyes told her what he couldn't say until he had won the right to ask her.

"Did you think I'd bother tocoach-you if I didn't care?" she said softly, turning away to blink the unwilling tears from her lovely gray eyes.

And just then the nurse came in with a box of flowers from the coach and a cheery note from the crew. Rog's eyes dimmed as he turned to Betty and it didn't occur to him to wonder why Di did not come; he knew she loathed hospitals.
