N. C. Farms Need More Feed, Cattle, Poultry

North Carolina farmers who have studied agricultural conditions in the State believe they should produce more poultry, livestock, and feed, but less cotton, tobacco, and other cash crops.

Such a shift in production is needed to balance farming to meet local requirements and at the same time provide adjustments necessary from a national standpoint, the farmers decided.

Farmers who made the study were committeemen appointed in almost every county of the State in connection with the county program planning movement started last December by the State College agricultural extension service.

The 6,919 committeemen and assistants surveyed local conditions, discussed the situation with more than 50,000 other farmers, and made recommendations regarding improvements needed in this State.

A tabulation of all their recommendations, as made by Julian Mann, who is in charge of extension studies at State College, brought out the following points, "among other things:

The cotton crop should be cut 35 per cent below the average acreage for the 1928-1932 period. Allowing for better farming practices, production would be cut only 9 per cent.

The corn crop acreage should be cut slightly, but production increased from 41,606,000 to 60,890,000 bushels by securing higher yields.

Small winter grains should be increased from 807,000 to 1,153,000 acres. Hay crops should be increased from 1,009,000 to 1,328,000 acres, with the yield per acre being doubled.

Cattle should be increased from 684,000 to 926,000 head, swine from 947,000 to 1,466,000 head, sheep from 77,000 to 154,000 head, chickens from 8,806,000 to 11,820,000 birds, eggs from 33,601,000 to 82,039,000 dozen, horses and mules from 326,000 to 434,000 head.
