

OBSERVATIONS

(By Mrs. A. H. Patterson)

I hear that the Floral Fair this year will be climaxed by a Three-Act Comedy,—"Black-Eyed Susan"—given at the High School auditorium Friday evening, November 6, at 8:30.

This play to be given in the interest of our crack High School Band, while entirely separate and apart from the Floral Fair, will doubtless prove a GRAND FINALE to the aforesaid momentous occasion.

The scenes, I believe take place in a FLOWER GARDEN and the play has to do with GARDEN CLUBS and the like and no need to say, its entirely in place, coming on the eve of the Flower Show.

Came upon a lady, a stranger in Kings Mountain who was asking a man on the street to direct her to the office of a certain well-known lawyer. The man's face was blank and unable to get the information desired the lady turned to me. After she passed on the man looked at me in embarrassment and said, "You know I'm ashamed of it but I don't know where none of them lawyers offices is. I know how to find the doctor and the tooth dentist, but I don't know nothin' about findin' them lawyers." Am thinking he'd have nothing left for the lawyers, if he found the doctor and tooth dentist often.

Lets return borrowed property.—The traffic cops, Boy Scouts and others would have to be called into service, if all of us should start out to return borrowed property at one time. How about that book that's been lying in your library and mine for so long? Meant to return it but didn't. The owner has it in for you too 'though he may be very sweet about it, on the surface, when you apologize.—That pattern you didn't return? Mrs. So and So has looked the house over for it a number of times—too busy too — wanted it in a hurry but when you are I got through with it, we were selfish enough not to care and she's forgotten who borrowed it last—so there.—In a hurry a rake was borrowed—just wanted it to rake up leaves and rubbish — so did the owner, but you hadn't returned it and she had no one to send for it—then later rake disappears altogether.—Didn't return that music you borrowed for the last funeral, but no difference the music doubtless was the property of the church anyway and not hers, so you'll just keep it, maybe need it for another funeral any way.—And the STEP LADDER, Step ladders of all things are public property—but granting that, the man who bought the ladder would like to know which of the public owners used it last, in case he happened to need it, which doubtless he would or he'd never bought it. He'd like to know where to go to get it, in case the windows need washing.—Any way he adores carrying a heavy ladder, especially when in a hurry.—Playing cards — I hear they're borrowed too, and were you sure when you returned them, that you returned a full deck? "Oh, well" you say, "I'm not so sure they were all there when I borrowed them." But you played with them. Come to think of it we borrowers don't stop at anything—it's borrow this and borrow that and strange how much easier to borrow than to return or pay back.

I know of a mother who was especially careful not to borrow unnecessarily and was careful to return borrowed property. This mother was called away from home on an extended trip and before leaving cautioned her young girls about borrowing from neighbors during her absence. When she returned the youngest member of the family, eager to tell everything, pleasant or unpleasant, said, "You know" calling her older sister's name, has just been borrowing everything, why she even borrowed Mrs. to cut up a chicken."

Seriously speaking, some where about your house and mine, are books or other things, lying unnoticed, that are no doubt of value to the owner. Let's right about face and return these things. You'll be happier and I'll be happier if we return and get back that borrowed property.

Mrs. Hoey in her talk to the women voters last Friday stressed the importance of each woman exercising her right to vote. She spoke of the objection of some men to Woman Suffrage, giving as their reason, that it would take the women from their home duties. Mrs. Hoey said that after hearing this argument she was surprised, when she found that in casting her first vote, she was only gone from home fifteen minutes, this including time spent in conversation with a passing friend.

Mrs. Hoey might have added, had she not been too sweet to cast reflection that too many of those objecting "better halves" were of the stick-whittling, soap-box, variety upon the shoulder of whose wives tell the burden of the work of both, et cetera.

If you haven't driven up Cherryville road to see those lovely flowers in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Huffstetter, you really have missed a feast of beauty.—And how we do hate to see those lovely chrysanthemums, dahlias, snap dragons and the like, killed. I understand the place which is near the end of the paved section of the Kings Mountain-Cherryville highway and just beyond the new landing field has been named Uncle Henry's Place.—When winters over, you'll find the beds (and they are built so attractively—look almost good enough without flowers), filled with tulips and other early blooming flowers. These are followed later by colorful gladioli and so on and on. Mrs. Huffstetter who we'd say has a "knack" with flowers, has wonderful co-operation from her husband, which is saying a "heap" and about all that's needed for a flower garden, once you get started.
