IT ALL DEPENDS ON WHOSE OX IS GORED

So much has been said and written about the "trade-at-home" idea that it has become trite except when proper consideration is given to the factors that go into the reasons for doing your buying in the home area -on a comparative basis.

The question invariably falls back to the point as to whose ox is gored. Follow Roe Fulkerson in The Kiwanis Magazine as he says:

"One of the things which keeps a small town small, and which makes doing business or practicing a profession so hazardous, is the number of people in that town who earn their income there, and spend it in the nearby large city.

"The small town dentist is irritated by the local citizen who goes to the large city to patronize the cheap advertising dentist, when he himselt goes to the big town tailor to have his clothes made. The small town lawyer complains when the big city lawyer is called in on an important case, but when he is getting married he goes to the big city to buy his flance's engagement ring. The local druggist is annoyed when the woman who runs the beauty parlor goes to the big city for her soaps and creams, yet he allows his wife to go to that same big city for bargain permanent waves.

"Let him among us who is without sin, cast the first stone. When a man makes his living out of the citizens of a town, it is his duty to spend every dollar of that income in the town, if possible. If he expects the people of that town to do bustness with him, then he should realize his own obligation to do business with them."

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE: Because he persists in his infatuation for Josie Bradford, Major George Daviot's wife, Anne, has left him for unan-nounced destinations in Europe. Accompanied by friends, he at-tends a week-end party at a country estate, joins a poker game, wins heavily. Grant, the loser, accuses Daviot of cheat-ing, and is supported by Captain Bradford approve to reverse the ing, and is supported by Captain Bradford, anxious to revenge the loss of his wife. Although Davoit wants to bring suit, he is dissuaded by friends, fearful of the publicity. He breaks with Josie, altempts to take up regimental life, but discovers that the story has spread. In seclusion in a Bayswater hotel, he is visited by his old friends, thrusts them out. One friend, Cinderford, goes to France to get Anne's assistance. The crisis arrives when his Colonel demands that Daviot sue his accusers or resign. George onel demands that Daviot sue his accusers or resign. George spurns his alternative, because he has his own plan — suicide. And returns to his residence to carry it out.

Chapter Five

Daviot heard two knocks. Then He stopped. The tears that had with fascinated eyes he watched been welling to her eyes had suda barrister. He said flatly that he did not want to defend Daviot.

"I'm surprised that you have a reputation at all," Anne snapped.
"You ought to go into court because you believe in your client's innocence, not to win cases."
"I don't believe in your husband's innocence," he pointed out.
"Then, for Heaven's sake, don't take this case. He'll be ruined."
"How dare you make a remark like that," he said, shaken out of his complacency. "You have a nerve coming here after I said I wouldn't see you."

see you."
"The same nerve that enabled me to take this away from him," she answered calmly and whipped the gun from her handbag. Sir Quentin recoiled in terror. Then understand-ing that she did not intend to shoot him, picked up the gun and stared at it for a moment.

"Don't waste your time staring at me," he shouted, jumping to his feet. "Get hold of your fool of a husband. Open your house. Start entertaining again. Show the world you're not afraid." "Then you're taking the case?"
Anne asked tremulously:

"What a case," he coared. "And what an impertment imposition. It's I who'll be needing this thing — not your husband."

"The same nerve that enable me to take this from him."

the door open and Anne enter. He dropped the revolver to the desk quickly, shielded it from her view with his body.

"Hullo — I heard you were in trouble, so I came back."

He was overwrought, tense.

"Who told you? Cinderford? Stupid interfering folk, trying to get at me through you. Haven't they any sense of decency? It's no use your coming back like an angel of mercy. I know what to do and I'll do it!"

Anne's eye saw the revolver, but denly flowed over on to her cheeks uncontrollably.

The plan didn't come off as well as Sir Quentin had anticipated. A few guests showed up, and among them was Josie who went directly to the point. She insisted that Daviot had no right to bring suit. She alleged her former love for him. And when Anne confronted her, she said very deliberately "He did cheat!" Tandy enjoyed the task of showing her to the door.

Another was George's colonel. He was completely in sympathy, but his training and his blood forbade his showing it. Except in one simple way. He lifted his glass and looked steadily at Daviot. "Well, George," he spoke. "Zero hour!"

Anne's eye saw the revolver, but she knew she had to conceal hor terror. She was acting a role. She sat in a chair on the other side of the room to draw him away from the desk. Quietly, she answered him.

"You're perfectly right. This is the only thing you can do if you're found out to be a cheat. But I think you might have had the decency to try and clear yourself first—to put me right with the world!"

"If I only could—If I only could"
George cried, He told her how the evidence was massed against him. "That doesn't alter the fact that you're innocent. Will you take the chance?"

Her face was strained as she waited for his answer.

"Till do it!"

"Then I'll keep the gun," she announced triumphantly. "Understand, to the world I have returned as your wife. To you as a friend, perhaps the last friend—"

"I understand," he interrupted. "And you understand. I will try your way. If it falls, my way!"

Anne realized the enormity of the task facing them both, when she interviewed Sir Quentin Jessop In an effort to get him to take the case. He was justly celebrated for his legal skill, and did not like to take hopeless cases, because they would reflect on his repuation as

Farm Questions Answered

Q.—How much fertilizer should ise in my home garden?

A.-On the average soils, fertilizer may be broadcast at the rate of 2.000 pounds to the acre, but if applied in the furrow, the applications should not be greater than 1,000 lbs to the acre. Heavier applications may cause serious damage to the crops. If more fertilizer seems neces sary, apply it in the form of a side dressing after the crops have be come established. Side-dressings with readily available nurgen fer tilizers are often necessary, especia lly with leafy vegetables such as cap bage, lettuce, kale, and spinach but excessive applications should not be made. Two moderate applications will give better results when the fer tilizer is applied in this way.

Q.-Does it pay to mate purebred birds to mongrel hens?

A.-While this is quite a common practice in small farm flocks the results are usuall questionable as the mongrel hens are usually so cross bred or inbred that it is difficult to build good qualities in them. best method is not to mate the mon- mixture to feed during this period is grel birds.
