HIS Aim IS TO Serve YOU
As a telephone installer and repairman, he knows that the less you need him, the more satisfaction you get from your dependable telephone service.
He wages a battle with sleet, rain and wind, as well as with lesser troubles, such as carelessness in leaving the receiver off the hook which may require a personal visit by him.
He is winning his battles, too, for back of him in the constant effort to make your service more and more free from imperfections, errors and delays are the scientists in the Bell Telephone Laboratories who contribute the research; the Western Electric Company, which makes and distributes high quality, standardized equipment; and the training activities of his own group, which helps him to be more expert and efficient on the job.
It is a man-sized job. There were 1,079,692 Southern Bell telephones in service at the end of 1937. But they didn't all "stay put," for installers connected 236,788, disconnected 159,284, and moved 106,512, this latter step requiring both a "connect" and "disconnect" operation.
Learning to do a constantly improving job is the aim of the installer and repairman, which is in harmony with the Bell System's desire to give the most telephone service and the best, at the least cost consistent with financial safety.
