Critical Period Faced By Bees of This State

This is a critical period for the bees of North Carolina, advises C. L. Sams, apiarist of the State College Extension Service. It is the brood-rearing period, which started in some sections in January, and will continue until the honey flow begins.

Spring management is often more difficult than wintering for the average beekeeper, Sams said. This is due largely to the sudden changes in temperature, which are hard on both bees and brood. A temperature of 92 to 96 degrees is necessary in the brood nest. A sudden change to cold weather after about 10 days of warm weather will result in the loss of much brood unless the colonies are well protected.

Listing the requirements for successful spring management of bees, the apiarist said: An abundance of stores, a good queen, and sufficient room for rearing the brood are most important. A good queen is one that will have a two-story, 10 frame hive well filled with bees and ten or 12 frames of brood at the beginning of the main honey flow. Food in abundance is necessary if we are to have these strong colonies. It is not sufficient to have only enough stores to maintain the life of the colony, Sams declared.

The amount of honey required at this time is more than most persons realize. It takes about one pound of bees. Ninety pounds of honey is needed to bring the colony to the possible 100,000 population. Most of this honey is gathered by the bees, but the beekeeper was advised by Sams to have an extra supply in the colonies at all times.

The minimum population of a normal colony in the spring is 15,000 bees. The population should be from 60,000 to 80,000.

TROOP 2 NEWS

Scouting just a little better than people expect it to be!

Signed: Charles Gantt, Scribe. Jack Hullender, Scoutmaster.

Troop 2 met at 7:30 o'clock in the Lutheran church. David Mauney led us in the Scout Oath. Dues were collected by the patrol leaders. We played a bird game in which we had to name a bird and its characteristics. We then went outside and played fox and dog.

TROOP FIVE NEWS

Well, another week has rolled around and time for some publicity for 'Good ole Troop 5.' We, (the Scouts of Troop 5) always have and always will challenge any troop to surpass any program we put on any time!

I don't know just why we always get the good breaks that come to Kings Mountain, that is in the Scout program. Next week if you will notice a BIG Bang that came to Troop 5 without any body in any troop knowing it. It may seem sound to us but, maybe you will have something on us sometime.

After four years of Scouting in the "ole Troop" we find what every other Scout finds, we have the best troop in the world!

Here is something for every troop in town to think about: "Does every body in town know that your troop exists?"

Really boys, let's try to make
