Will Rogers' Humorous Story

By WILL ROGERS THREE small boys entered the village hardware store. The rather gruff proprietor said to the tallest, "What do you want, Boy?"

went for the ladder again. He made up the packet as before, and then turned to the third. "And do you want a dime's worth of BB's, too?" he demanded.

Stay At Home Away From War: Settlemyre

J. L. Settlemyre, Jr., just returned from Paris, France, where he has been studying art for the past several months, declares emphatically that the only thing for America to do concerning the present situation is to "Stay at home and mind our own business."

Mr. Settlemyre said that Paris was at present dead, and that the French people as a whole were silent and morose concerning the present war. He told the Herald reporter that the French not to prevent a war in the near future — with the belief that if Hitler conquers Poland with out resistance, he will invade France in the future.

When questioned concerning actual battles, he said that he actually saw two aerial battles — one between anti-aircraft guns and a bomber, and another when a 'sausage' was shot down.

Mr. Settlemyre spoke of blackouts just as we speak about the plays that Duke will use to defeat Carolina this year. He said that the first alarm in Paris sent the population to cellars from 1:20 in the morning until 7:00. After emerging for breakfast at that time, they again went below for two or three more hours.

Speaking further on the proposed neutrality laws, Major Bulwinkle said: "We must be neutral. We will not sacrifice our people. It lies with you to see that we remain neutral. We are not going to get into it. Appeal to you to stop the slack talk about us getting into it."

The band which Major Bulwinkle spoke of was on hand for the opening, marching up the newly paved section of Battleground Avenue back again, and returning. After the formal opening, the band led a motorcade two blocks down the highway, then broke ranks. The motorcade continued to where the new and old highways intersect on the west side of town, turned and motored back over the bridge.

Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

The Test That Could Not Fail

By IRVIN S. COBB THIS yarn has a Southern setting. In Kentucky, in the pre-Volstead days, lived a gentleman who prided himself on being a judge of fine Bourbon.

"Watkins," said the white man one evening, "here's some very choice whiskey that Colonel Thompson, of the Thompson distillery, sent me today with his compliments. It's out of his private stock and he tells me that it's been aging in wood for fourteen years. You've got an appreciative palate, I want your judgment on it."

Washington Snapshots by JAMES PRESTON

(Opinions Expressed in This Column Are Not Necessarily the Views of This Newspaper.) The stunning sense of disbelief that invaded the mind of the average American when the headlines screamed WAR was probably, in the long run, the best possible reaction.
