Farmers Organized in Defense Program

Farmers of North Carolina are organized for any emergency, says Dr. I. O. Schaub, director of the State College Extension Service. They are ready to meet any call for contributions to National defense in the form of food, feed, and materials for clothing. They have been preparing for such a call in recent years. They have experienced leadership to do the job, he declared.

Dr. Schaub said that the National Farm Program has enabled farmers to become better organized and more ready to work together than at any time in history. He also pointed out that, through the Agricultural Conservation Program, the fertility of the soil has been built up to where the necessities of war could be produced in greater quantities with less time and expense.

"Our Extension organization was only three years old when the United States entered the first World War in 1917," Dr. Schaub continued. "Yes, with limited personnel and experience, the farm and home agents and subject matter specialists provided efficient leadership in that great crisis. Farm and home demonstration work is now 26 years old, and we have an organization of trained agents, specialists and administrators. Every county in the State is organized for Extension work."

"Many of the farm and home agents, canning and clothing specialists, and others who directed emergency activities of rural people in 1917 and 1918, and again during the depression years, are still with the organization. They did their jobs of efficiently then; they have the confidence of the farm people, and are ready to lead again."

It will not be necessary to set up new services, or new organizations of farmers to carry on agriculture's part of the National defense program.

The importation of purebred animals into the United States for breeding purposes increased during the calendar year 1939 as shown by records of certificates issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Farm Cooperatives

A total of 10,700 farmers' marketing and purchasing cooperatives were in business during the 1938-39 marketing season just closed and transacted business amounting to $2,100,000,000.

Agricultural experiment stations in many States and foreign countries are conducting experiments to develop a dwarfed variety of apple tree, which would simplify spraying and harvesting.
