

Growers Make Ready To Sow Winter Peas

Austrian winter peas will play a major role in protecting North Carolina farm land against the ravages of soil erosion during the cold bleak months, says E. C. Blaid, agronomist of the State College Extension Service.

Already growers have ordered more than 1,500,000 pounds of Austrian pea seed through the AAA's grant-of-aid program for spreading a green blanket over their unprotected lands this winter.

Blaid said the seed should be sown earlier the better. On land where they have never been grown before, the seed should be broadcast at the rate of 30 to 40 pounds to the acre. Twenty to 30 pounds is enough when drilling peas or when broadcasting on land that is well inoculated.

The seed must be inoculated unless they are sown on land that is already inoculated. Land inoculated for vetch or for garden peas (May peas) does not require inoculation for Austrian peas.

In the Mountains and Piedmont, best results will be secured with 200 pounds of a 0-10-4 on good soils or 200 pounds of 4-10-4 on the poorer soils. The fertilizer application to the crop following the peas may then be reduced by these amounts.

Motor vehicle accidents in this country last year resulted in non-fatal injuries to 1,150,000 persons.

Show Cattle Need Careful Attention

The farmer whose animals win blue ribbons at fall fairs is the one who has seen that no detail has been overlooked in showing them to the best possible advantage, says L. I. Case, extension animal husbandman of State College.

The first step in feeding and fitting beef cattle for the show or sale ring is the actual selection of suitable animals. Little will be gained by waiving feed and time on off-type cattle that will never make a favorable appearance no matter how fat or how well trained they may become.

The ideal beef animal, Case explained, is one that is thick, blocky, and reasonably close to the ground. He should be straight in his top, bottom, and side lines, carry an even width from end to end and be close in the coupling.

NERVINE TABLETS

The animal should show evidence of good quality as indicated by a pliable hide, a soft silky coat of hair, neatness in the bone, and smoothness in the flesh covering. In temperament, the animal should be reasonably quiet and docile, yet yet with enough life and style to give him an attractive carriage.

No matter how good a beef animal is as an individual, he will not show to advantage unless he is in top condition. This makes it necessary that cattle be started early enough to assure a good finish at the time of sale.

It takes a day rather than twice, a greater total consumption of food will be induced. The texture of the ration should be kept coarse.
