Football Season
Makes Hazardous
Driving

Taking cognizance of the opening of the 1940 football season in North Carolina, Ronald Hocutt, director of the Highway Safety Division, appealed this week to football fans of this state to do their part this year toward reducing the traffic toll generally incident to Fall week-ends.

"Accident records for the past several years show that football fans on their way to or from games have figured in a good many accidents on week ends in September, October and November," Hocutt said. "In the first place," he stated, "general accident experience is that 60 percent of all traffic fatalities occur at night, and most football fans have to do right much of their driving during the hours of dusk and darkness. Then, too, at practically every football game there are a number of automobile drivers who take a few drinks during the game. Also, many drivers who attend games are in a great big hurry to get to the game or to get back home after the game, with the result that they drive at excessive rates of speed and take dangerous, needless chances.

"All of these factors," he said, "contribute to a high traffic accident frequency on week ends in the fall." His suggestions to football fans are: Leave home early enough that you won't have to drive at break neck speed in order to see the kick off. If you have been drinking, get some sober person to drive for you. In driving at night, dim your headlights when meeting other cars, don't overdrive your headlights, and watch for pedestrians on the highway. Be sportsmanlike in your driving. Sportsmanship is important on the highway, as well as on the gridiron. And above all, don't be in too big a hurry.
