

Pine Fence Posts Lasts If Treated

Not every farm has on it black locust, red cedar, bald cypress or the other durable woods desirable for fence posts. But R. W. Graeber, Extension forester of N. C. State College, says there are few farmers who can't find some pine or gum trees from which long-lasting fence posts can be made with the proper treatment of the wood with creosote or some other preservative.

Locust, cypress, cedar, red mulberry and catalpa are so durable they require no treatment, Graeber said, but unfortunately most of these species have been exhausted on thousands of North Carolina farms. However, even the least durable can be made to last from 15 years upward if properly treated.

The Extension forester recommends creosote. First, he says, have the wood peeled clean and thoroughly dry. Then place the posts on end in a boiler containing creosote oil and boil for two hours. Posts should be in the oil to a depth of six inches deeper than they will stand in the ground. Upon removal from the boiler, place the entire post in a tank of cold dresote oil and allow to remain for two hours.

Very satisfactory results also have been obtained, Graeber says, from the use of zinc chloride as a preservative. This is much quicker since green posts are used. In fact, the sooner they are treated after cutting, the better.

4 STEEL FACTS in one minute

Steel Capacity Above Previous Peak Demand
Because it has spent $1,500,000,000 for modernization and new equipment since 1929, the steel industry now can produce fully one-third more steel annually than it has ever been called on to make in any calendar year.

Workers of the nation's first iron works in 1844 were exempted from paying taxes. Also unlike other colonies they were...

Better Steels Made

Better Aircraft
Because of the better steels now available, a modern airplane engine weighs only one pound per horsepower developed, whereas the Wright brothers' first engine weighed 21 pounds per horsepower.

Wagon And Cart Drivers Warned

A spurt this fall in deaths and injuries arising from collisions between motor vehicles and animal-drawn vehicles on North Carolina streets and highways has prompted Ronald Hocutt, director of the Highway Safety Division, to set forth some safety suggestions for drivers of wagons and carts.

Hocutt said 13 persons were killed and 76 injured in the state last year in collisions between motor vehicles and animal-drawn wagons and carts, and that several such accidents have occurred in the past few weeks.

"The farmer riding along the highway stands much chance when an automobile or truck hits him," said Hocutt. "In many cases he is killed outright and in practically every such accident the person or persons riding in the horse cart suffer injuries of some description. About the least he can expect is that his wagon or cart be badly smashed up and his horse or mule killed or crippled."

"For these reasons, persons who drive an animal-drawn vehicle on the highways of North Carolina should take every step possible to protect themselves from the awful results of a collision with a motor vehicle."

OUR DEATH TOLL

We are appalled at the slaughter of civilians in Europe by indiscriminate bombing. How many men, women and children have been shuffled out in London and Berlin while going about their daily tasks, we do not know, though figures released from both countries show the toll in mounting thousands.

Meanwhile, the death toll of our own streets and roads has also mounted; in the first nine months of this year, to 23,830. That is 1,500 more than in the same period last year, the National Safety Council reports.

The man, woman, or child sudden ly struck down on the highway with out warning is just as dead as the bomb victim; the sorrow of their family and friends is just as great; the loss to the country as telling. And however useless war may be, it is no more useless than the death we permit to stalk our streets.

The season of slippery pavements and rain-dimmed windshields is upon us. Don't let death thumb a ride in your car!

London, Nov. 19.—Thirteen merchant ships totaling 71,747 tons were lost through enemy action in the week ending Nov. 10-11, the Admiralty announced today.
