"merchants of death" that there weren't any producers of these goods. New plants had to be built. Again, machinings had been built up as destroyers of jobs. The makers of machines had just been coasting along on the little business which people had to give them. Now workers are needed, but they can't just grow into full operation over night. Also, government press agents had put out a stream of releases about contracts being granted. Since this followed optimistic talk about 50,000 airplanes and two-ocean navies, the people thought everything was rosy. They were undersold on the fact that there is a lot which must happen between ordering a tank and actually getting it.

Still, again, people had been told that the nation could arm itself and still have its present comforts and luxuries. Now there is official doubt about all these things. Even officialdom is beginning to hope the people will see that like total war, total defense (especially when that includes furnishing Britain's weapons) requires sacrifices.

More information therefore will "leak" out about difficulties the defense program must overcome. There will be talk about how the cost of the program must be increased both to "lease" material to Britain and to meet rising wage levels.

Many manufacturers contracted to produce defense goods with the understanding that their employees would work 40 hours a week. There aren't enough trained workers in numerous industries to put on additional shifts. Therefore, present workers must stay on the job more than 40 hours. But, as it is now being made clear, unions insist upon time and a half for all hours over 40 a week. Hence more money must be spent for the same things if they are to be produced faster.

If night shifts are put on, the cost also will rise in many cases. One defense producer who went on a three - instead of a two-shift basis discovered that his "graveyard" is more than the two day shifts

Another thing which may be made clear is that makers of defense goods aren't going to be war millionaires. The law permits the War Department to give a fee of 7 per cent to those who produce munitions. The average fee allowed so far is less than 5 percent, and that of course, is before Uncle Sam takes his taxes out of the 5 per cent.

In one important industry, the average fee above actual costs is only . percent. The story of one producer in this group shows why it is difficult to tell all the facts to the public.

This producer was asked if the statement about his patriotism. He raised his hands in horror and refused, saying he didn't want to be painted in public, as a "munitions maker."
