Six Point Program For Quality Poultry Given

T. T. Brown, Extension poultry specialist of N. C. State College, says the greatest need in the North Carolina poultry industry is to improve the quality of poultry products offered on the market.

ed on the market Local distributors of poultry products are always glad to handle our local products if we will furnish them quality eggs and meat in sufficient quantity and steadily, he says.

As a six point program for producing quality poultry, Brown lists: (1) Keep only purebred poultry and secure the chicks or stock from a dependable breeder; (2) avoid overcrowding — allow baby chicks at least one square foot of floor space for each two chicks, exclusive of space occupied by the brooder; (3) Provide plenty of ventilation with out floor drafts; (4) Use a high quality feed and feed liberally; (5) Provide ample feed and watering equipment; and (6) Clean and disinfect the house and equipment thoroughly before the chicks are started and keep the house and yards clean.

Three marketing hints are also given by the state poultry specialist: (1) Destroy thin, light, and diseased birds, never offer them on the market and market only finished birds; (2) grade and assort live market birds according to size, color and finish; and (3) starve birds to be dressed for 15 to 20 hours before slaughter, but do not withhold drinking water.

Unless we meet the quality requirements, Brown declared, we shouldn't blame local distributors from going to California and the Middle West for eggs and dressed poultry, and to Texas for dressed turkeys. As much as some of us apparently dislike it, it will be necessary to dress and grade market poultry and turkeys, and candle and grade eggs before these products reach the retailer.

Of the 20 boys enrolled in the Jamesville 4-H Club, 15 will carry peanuts as their project for 1941, reports John I. Eagles, assistant farm agent of Martin County.
