WHY THIS PANIC?
Our forefathers existed without sugar until the thirteenth century. Real fires were unknown until the fourteenth, battered bread came along in the fifteenth, they did with out potatoes, or tobacco until the sixteenth, coffee, tea or soup until the seventeenth, puddings until the eighteenth, gas and electricity until the nineteenth, canned food until the twentieth. If our sturdy forefathers who blazed the way for the luxuries of life managing in many instances to get along without even the bare necessities, surely we can deny ourselves the necessities of life so as to contribute to the defense of our beloved democracy.
