Chicago, June 2.—After spending the last 22 years purchasing 100,000 books, George B. Utley has decided to take time off to read some of them.

Utley, who is head of the Newberry Library, said he planned to retire and "I intend to start coming to the building as a reader rather than a librarian." He explained he had been so busy looking for worth while volumes to add to the library, that he had "no time to read them."

Seattle, June 2.—University of Washington chemical engineers are putting the finishing touches on a machine that converts waste wood into shiny black briquets suitable as a fuel for smelting iron or steel or as a substitute for coal.

Williamsport, Pa., June 2.—Their legs shielded by high leather boots, searchers ranged across a snake-infested Allegheny mountain area today hunting blind, three year old Alvin Dugan, missing since Saturday.

The child wandered into a forest while his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Trevor Dugan, farmers, worked in a wild strawberry patch.

Bern, Switzerland, June 2.—German occupation authorities in Paris announced today ten hostages would be shot if the person or persons who attacked a German soldier last Wednesday were not captured in ten days. Swiss dispatches reported.

In addition, the Germans said, "A great number of persons will be put at forced labor."

Cleveland, June 2.—The Lake Erie shore counted seven dead today from the sudden sweep of a water wall, described at one point as fifteen to twenty feet high, which plowed against night fishing parties in a 60-mile stretch of the lakefront.

At least seven others were injured and hospitalized.

A sudden shift in wind direction was the major cause of the huge wave, the Cleveland Weather Bureau reported. One witness said a small crest followed later.

West Palm Beach, Fla., June 2.—Morrison Field soldiers were ordered back to their base from a Sunday holiday after some 500 of them doubled up with stomach cramps and nausea on city streets and the beach.

Post officers gave no statement yesterday, but food poisoning was the apparent cause.

A few of the men were made unconscious. A fleet of ten civilian defense ambulances, aided by military medical units, dashed back and forth for three hours hauling the ailing soldiers.

Denver, June 2.—A police accident report indicates there are hazards, even in the slower types of emergency transportation. Jack Rowland, 16, and his brother Ray, 20, were injured when a motor car collided with their tandem bicycle.

Laughing Around the World With IRVING S. COBB

But the Assy Came Too Late

By IRVING S. COBB

IT IS bad business for a tumbler to monkey with a mining-boom. When the news came out of Cobalt that great mineral wealth was lying around in those hills, a garrison from Vermont left a good job in Washington and hot-footed it into the Canadian eyewit. He spent several weeks looking about for something in mining property that would put him in the millionaire class.

In the course of his investigation he met a bunion wader whom Somehow he had lost a partner. The Vermonter became a sponge wader to the bunion of the bunion wader. On the mountainside he set up a temporary office of sponge of pines, which glittered and gave him a sense of being among great riches.

In spite of the fact that the dirt miner was hardly cold in his new office, the Vermonter began an aggressive campaign of advertising. He was the wader's best and wiped her base away at the first.

"We don't eat after the first bell does that one to split away a portion of the system and carry the rest to a local hospital," "We've got a lot," claimed the Vermonter, laying the one in the competitor's face.

"I think I'll just go home," replied the sensible man. "We systematically eat."

"I think I'll just go home," responded the Vermonter, shrugging at the man.

Will Rogers' Humorous Story

By WILL ROGERS

THE Worst Job I heard today

I was English. It was told to illustrate the difficulty of the profession of selling brooms. Now, if any of you sell brooms you will be interested in the following narrative of the broom business.

There was a seller of brooms in London. His brooms were so good he had built up a solid trade. He had a shop in the neighborhood of the Temple in London. On the sidewalk he set up a temporary office of brooms, which glittered and gave him a sense of being among great riches.

In spite of the fact that the dirt miner was hardly cold in his new office, the Vermonter began an aggressive campaign of advertising.

He was the wader's best and wiped her base away at the first.

"We don't eat after the first bell does that one to split away a portion of the system and carry the rest to a local hospital," "We've got a lot," claimed the Vermonter, laying the one in the competitor's face.

"I think I'll just go home," replied the sensible man. "We systematically eat."

"I think I'll just go home," responded the Vermonter, shrugging at the man.

Immediately brooms surprised when he learned that there was someone else selling brooms, and that he was getting no orders.

"The truth is," one of his customers related, "there are two other men around here with just as good brooms and they are much cheaper so naturally I had to buy."

He had never heard of the neighbor before.

"Well, why don't you think it could be me?"

"Well, I thought the neighbor was a bit more experienced in the broom business."

"Well, you can't expect me to tell you that I'm a bit more experienced in the broom business."

"Well, I think you're right."

"Well, I think you're right."
