SERVING Vital WAR NEEDS

A great public service—your telephone—is successfully carrying its added responsibilities as it performs its many vital wartime duties. Few who daily use the telephone on a momentary basis realize its extreme importance in time of war. Today, in the area served by Southern Bell, war activities are moving at a tempo never before equaled. Throughout these nine Southeastern States, many new military and naval training camps, new and enlarged Navy and Marine shipyards, Air Force training and flying fields, and the huge plants employed in war production, are teeming with all-out activity. All rely on the dependability and efficiency of the telephone, as national and civilian agencies relay the urgent messages of a Nation at war. The telephone is the means of activating quick control of vast numbers of men and units of equipment, as well as for instant communication on a war front stretching around the world. This is why the telephone, long recognized as a great American convenience, is now vital to the successful conduct of the war, and Southern Bell is proudly doing its part in meeting our Government's every telephone communication need.
