Controls Would Wreck Postwar Policy

If government controls should become the dominant element of our postwar policy they would be likely to wreck, rather than to save, business, labor and agriculture, according to U. S. Senator Harold H. Burton of Ohio.

"We must have a production of real wealth in America that will substantially exceed our production before the war," he declares.

"To finance such development calls for a flexible flow of capital into countless enterprises, dynamic initiative, and effort such as can be the product only of individual enterprise."

Postwar Products To Be Of Good Value

Postwar cars may include a bus-couman's model with filing cabinet, work table and two-way radio, according to John B. Brown, associate of Raymond Loewy, industrial engineer immediate postwar projects, however, will not be revolutionary. "Industry must choose," he explains, "between giving people, quickly, products which they need, but which are much like postwar models, and putting out new products not fully tested. They will choose the former."

The government's taxation policies, in many cases, will deny industry immediate funds for experimentation, so that the first postwar purchase money will "go into a capital fund that industry will need for developing and perfecting new products."

"Postwar products, nevertheless, will be better value for the dollar," he adds. "They will be light, strong compact, thanks to industry's development of new materials."

CHIT - CHAT

Twenty years ago a girl wasn't thought very nice if she telephoned a man. Nor would she have dreamed of asking him to take her anywhere, except under very special circumstances. Girls then were no better than modern girls. They behaved as they did because society was hard on any girl who disobeyed its code. For months it has puzzled me why so many well-mannered, sensible girls run after boys. Ask any girl and she'll always say: "I don't enjoy running after boys. It spoils them and makes them conceited. I'd much rather it were the other way around. But if I stay running after them, they won't run after me. They'll just forget I exist. There's so much competition these days that if I don't do what the other girls do, I'll get left out of things."

Maybe there is no way of getting around that answer. But if it's true they would do well out to be so obvious about it. The really smart girl nowadays is the girl who can chase a guy and make it appear as if she didn't.

If you must run, here are several tips that may come in handy. Don't be so possessive, don't cling or be a gossip. Don't try to be the local Lass who takes all the money and then tries for more and more. You know, the kind who likes anything "ing" as it's attention!

Now, for a change, let's talk with boys. How can you get to be head man in some girl's life, or even have all the girls liking you. In the first place you don't have to be tall, dark and handsome. You can be short, freckled and grameous. IF—there's always one of them things — you use your personality. And if you are willing to make a little effort. Man-now, for instance, you should have. Girls love the feeling of little things. It gives off the Walter Raleigh they have had a heavy cleaning bill, but you'll have to admit it didn't hurt his reputation.

Here are a few pointers: Advise a girl's clothes, and tell her she's pretty. If you have to use a line, don't use the same one twice. Show up for your date as a clean conservative guy. Don't slouch around as though you had just said goodbye to your last friend. Don't be shy and don't be forward. There's a middle road. When your Supreme attitude comes up, pitch it out the window. Get the flower habit. Just a luscious homegrown daisy in your grubby hand is appreciated.

Timely Suggestions For Egg Producers

Laying flocks must be culled down until 60 percent production is obtained if the grower is to break even or make any profits under present conditions, says C. F. Parrish, in charge of Extension poultry work at N. C. State College. He suggests that all fat and broody hens and all nonlayers be removed from the flock.

Plenty of green feed should be provided and it is best to feed about 100 pounds of green feed a day per 100 hens, according to Parrish. This practice enables the grower to save about 10 to 15 percent on his feed costs.

Incense war on the ribs and use waste proof features of the "47" type are other suggestions by Parrish. Experience has shown that filling the feeder only about two-thirds full saves on feed and helps to reduce costs. The feed should be stored in cool, dry and out-proof bins.

It is common practice for many growers to keep too many layers in one building. Parrish recommends that at least 4 square feet be allowed for each laying hen.

He also suggests that buildings be checked for mites and the birds themselves for lice. If these pests are present, immediate steps should be taken to get rid of them or the production of the hens will drop.

He also recommended that all males be removed from the flock except the valuable pedigree males used for breeding purposes. If this is done, about 10 percent of the feed cost can be saved.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

A dog story with a happy ending

Lem Martin's dog went on a rampage last week...killed four of Ed Carey's best hens.

Naturally, Ed was pretty mad. Went around vowing he was going to get his shotgun and blow the blues out of Lem's dog when he saw him. And Lem says, "Let him try it and I'll blow the blues out of him. Ought to keep his chickens locked up, anyhow."

But Ed and Lem are really mighty amiable fellows. And the whole thing was settled when Lem invited Ed over for a glass of beer, and they sat around chatting over the gravel as if it were a kind of job.

"Shucks," says Ed, "them hens didn't amount to much anyhow." And Lem says: "Just the same I'm bringin' you a barrel o' apples to pay for 'em."

From where I sit, it would be a lot better for the world if folks would settle their arguments peaceful-like—sitting around over a friendly glass of beer—instead of going off half-cocked, and making mountains out of molehills.
