Information Given On Cutting Pulpwood

Before a timber owner starts to cut pulpwood, he should know several things about the market and price he will receive. The first thing to find out is where he can sell and the price the buyer will pay. Next he will want to get the local specifications, since they vary in different places due to the different regulations of the mills. In general the mills will accept wood cut 5 feet long and to a minimum diameter of 4 inches at the small end of the stick. H. E. Blanchard, farm forester of the State College Extension Service at Whiteville, gives the following suggestions to farmers.

One item that is often confused is the difference between a 'cord' and a 'unit.' The majority of the mills buy on the basis of the cord of 128 cubic feet. If your pulpwood is cut five feet long and stacked in racks a foot long by 4 feet high, it contains one and one-fourth cords or one unit. The cord is the legal standard of measure in North Carolina, except that pulpwood may be bought and sold by the unit of 160 cubic feet until June 1, 1946. Before cutting operations, be sure on which basis you are dealing.

In cutting pulpwood, the first thing to do is to select the trees you are going to cut. Under most conditions, trees 12 inches or over should not be cut for pulpwood because they are worth much more for sawtimber. At least 80 of the best, straightest and largest trees should be left on each acre to grow into the future timber crop. Trees less than 6 inches should also be left because there is too much waste material in these small trees and too many trees must be cut to make a cord.

The actual cutting of pulpwood is hard work because it calls for much use of the saw and axe as well as considerable lifting. The simplest method is to cut and top the trees, skid them to a point that can be reached with a truck and then cut them into the desired lengths.

Polk county will celebrate its winning of the 1944 award for the great advance in cotton improvement work at a style show and trophy presentation ceremony in late April.

Farm Manpower Count Is Feature of Census

A count of the number of persons 14 years old and over, employed on farms in Cleveland county is being made by enumerators of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce, as one of the principal features of the 1945 Census. Agriculture now under way. This enumeration will provide information, it is explained by P. D. Herndon, supervisor of the 1945 farm census in this district, on the extent of the farm labor force in this county after three years of war and its drain on the farm population.

The agricultural labor force count now in progress throughout the Nation, a statement received by Mr. Herndon from Census Director J. C. Clegg at Washington points out, will provide detailed information on the number of farms in each of the country's more than 3,000 counties related to the number of persons residing in the farm households, and the number of persons employed on farms classified in three groups—farm operators, unpaid members of the operators' families and hired farm laborers.

At the time of the 1940 farm census, five years ago and two years before the entry of this country into World War II, there were 6,096,700 farms in the United States. Of these, 5,321,248 farms reported 9,664,168 persons working, with 5,081,848 farms reporting 7,940,727 members of the farm operators' families working on the farm, while 892,648 farms also reported employment of 1,753,941 persons as hired labor.

Mitcham Aboard Can In Iwo-Jima Fight

ABOARD A DESTROYER IN THE PACIFIC—When Luther R. Mitcham, 32, 512 USNR, 296 Cassler st., Kings Mountain, N. C., saw the Stars and Stripes flutter at the crest of Mt. Suribachi on bloody Iwo Jima, he did so with justifiable pride, for his ship, one of the US Navy's new heavy destroyers, had helped make that historical moment possible.

His ship, commanded by Commander R. N. Noyard, USN, of Bell Rapids, B. D., rode in the shallow waters only a few hundred yards from

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our deep appreciation to our many friends and neighbors for their kind expressions of sympathy since we learned of Lester's death in France. We shall never forget them. Mrs. Lester Moss and daughter, Cornelia.

Some boys work their ways through college and some play them through the beach throughout the night and morning during the final attack on Mount Suribachi by the 28th Regiment of the US Marines.

And when the rugged, never-renting Marines' efforts were crowned by the epic raising of "Old Glory," he could help but feel a never-to-be forgotten sense of historical, although costly achievement.

The "greyhound of the sea" had kept in close to the shoreline, shooting at enemy mortar and infantry positions in virtually inaccessible caves at point blank range with 5-inch and 40 mm. automatic guns, and illuminating Jap infiltration movements with powerful searchlights to lend the closest possible support to the heroism and daring Marines.

After a full night of firing, the Marines could be seen attaining their objective in the morning. At 10 a. m. they were struggling up the steep, final yards to the mountain's crest, with sporadic machine gun fire still dotting the barren and treacherous landscape.

"COME CLEAN WITH US AND WE'LL DYE FOR YOU"

"Thirty good years, Mother"

That star represents twenty-five years of service, the bar another five... altogether, thirty years that Jim has been working on the Southern Railway System.

"Thirty good years," Jim says. Because in the years since 1915 he has seen his Southland lay the foundations for a rich, full, abundant economy. He has seen agriculture, industry, mining and commerce team up with his own Southern Railway System to get things done.

And when war came, he was part of the Southern team that broke all records in moving men and materials swiftly and surely on their way to the fighting fronts.

Jim's proud of his thirty years. So are we. But Jim knows that even greater accomplishments are still to come.

And we share his faith in a great future for the postwar South... for we know that the next thirty years will be good years, too.
