Industry Here Can Handle Labor Supply, Says Official

Mary B. Goforth
 U.S. Employment Service

Kings Mountain industries can adequately take care of the local labor supply as expansion programs are put into effect within the next few months, for as building materials and other supplies become available there will be many job openings.

One of the greatest problems in the community now is the housing shortage.

During the past year the local U. S. Employment Service has had a large volume of activity as is shown by the following data:

The number of persons appearing at the Kings Mountain U. S. Employment Service during 1945 was 5,211. During August and September of 1945, following VJ Day, the number coming into the office decreased but the following months have shown an increase.

Of the total number coming in 1,586 were placed in jobs in local plants which were making materials vital to the war effort.

During the period of January 1 through August of 1945 employers listed the majority of job openings with the Employment Service and up through August there were 2,000 job openings listed.

The last three months of 1945 saw a rapid decline in job openings. A great deal of this drop was due to the lifting of all hiring restrictions and also to the fact that workers were more inclined to "stick" to their jobs, fearing that the demand for workers would not be so great as during the peak of war production.

During January 1946 the local office had 635 reception contacts—443 of these contacts were by persons seeking employment. 415 of the contacts were by veterans of W. W. II. These veterans came seeking jobs or to secure information regarding training or other services available to them.

Placements on jobs so far in 1946 have fallen far below 1945. Many veterans are seeking jobs not available in Kings Mountain. Many are wanting to train for new jobs and others have not decided what type of work they want. Others are returning to their old jobs after a short period. Several veterans have entered business for themselves.

The number of claims for Veterans Readjustment Allowance has been very small compared to the number of veterans discharged in this area.

Veterans are experiencing great difficulty in regard to housing. Some have had to refuse jobs because no housing or transportation could be worked out.

The housing situation has also affected non-veteran workers and local plants are experiencing difficulty in filling jobs due to this condition.

In spite of the large number of job seekers, the local office has had a very small number of claims for Unemployment Compensation. This, it seems, shows that workers in this area are really seeking jobs and are willing to work during the reconversion period just as they did during the war period.

The U. S. Employment Service has completed its change to peacetime activity and has already started on its program of helping reconversion in the community in its services to veterans, war workers and all employers.

Employers are urged to keep the local office informed of job openings in order that we can be of better service to them as well as to the unemployed worker who is seeking employment.
