Need A New Shirt Delivered By Air

It's just about a settled point that if you want a new shirt just journey into Bridges and Hamrick's here with a ragged one on and the boys there will tear off your old one (just for fun) and put out the cup for donations to buy a new shirt, and, last but not least, deliver it to you.

At any rate that's what happened to Irvin Allen, former sheriff, last week. (The writer doesn't advise anyone to try it however.)

The story goes something like this - Mr. Allen strolled nonchalantly into the store last week wearing a rather ragged shirt. Glee E. Bridges (not Commissioner Bridges) and Archie Costner, clerks in the store, started kidding Mr. Allen about being too tight to buy a new shirt, and Glee, while playfully struggling with the wearer, accidentally tore the garment a little more. After a few minutes of this kind of jesting, the shirt was in rags.

Mr. Allen's feelings weren't hurt, he being a good sport at it was, and when Commissioner Bridges (young Glee's father) and the boys offered to take up a collection and purchase him a new shirt, he was happy indeed.

The cup was placed on the counter along with a notice and before many hours had passed it contained enough to purchase the new shirt.

Meantime Mr. Allen had skipped town, returning to his home on route 3, thinking he had fooled the culprits plain.

He had no sooner arrived at his home when a plane zoomed over his plot and dropped a small parachute.

"She nuff" as Mr. Allen put it, there was a new shirt in the package!

Mr. Allen is expected to "show off" his new item of wearing apparel next Saturday afternoon, stating that he'd probably wear a barrel and try for a new pair of pants.
