Honor Society Gives Program

The National Honor Society of Kings Mountain high school presented a program to the students of the high school Friday, January 7.

Jack Ruth, president, stated that the program had intended to be an induction of five per cent of the senior class into the society, but that since May, 1948, the enrollment of the class has dropped so that the full 15 percent quota of seniors is already in the society, thus it was impossible to induct any more from the present senior class.

Peggy Mauney explained the objects of the National Society, stating that it is an organization that recognizes students of outstanding character and accomplishments and encourages students to strive for the worthwhile things in school and life. Only those schools that are tier members of a regional association or have the highest rating given to secondary schools by the state department of education can be members of the organization.

Character was discussed by Barbara Matthews, stating that character is not inherited, but a habit formed by the daily choices between good or bad, courage and weakness. She also said that character is dependent upon loyalty supporting one's school teachers, friends, classmates and working with them to build, instead of tearing down.

The next speaker, Peggy Jackson, discussed scholarship, saying that scholarship is a goal which every high school student should strive to reach, that scholarship is knowledge and knowledge is the key to success.

Bill Amos then discussed leadership, stating that a true leader gets things done without doing much himself, and that he uses time, situations, and individuals wisely. Bill said that when we serve the people we should have no selfish ends and we must always keep our honor, our friends and the truth with us. He ended by saying that those that participate in extra-curricular activities at school are truly building good leadership.

Service was the topic Pauline Mauney spoke of, saying, "Students should help their teachers as much as possible and participate in extra-curricular activities at school, and give as much talent to the betterment of the school as possible."

The significance of the emblem, colors, and motto of the society was explained by Herman Mauney. He stated, "Our emblem is the keystone, which has across the top the name of the organizations. In the corners are four capital letters—C-S-L-S, the C means character, the S stands for scholarship, the L signifies leadership, and the second S designates service." In front of the keystone was the flaming torch. Herman said, "That is the torch by which men are led into the dark unknown of knowledge."

Charles Blanton then explained that the members of the Kings Mountain Chapter of The National Honor Society, first of all, must have an average of A on conduct for their high school terms, and have been in the school more than a year. Next, home room teachers compile the grades of every student in the eleventh grade at the end of the first semester. The names of the upper third are given to the members by the sponsor of the organization, and they vote on 10 percent of the third. This list is then sent to a meeting of the faculty where they are discussed on service, leadership, character, and the voted on. The 10 percent "elected" are inducted in the society.

"Toward the end of the first semester in the senior year," Charles said, "5 percent of the senior class may be inducted by the same process. Never can more than 15 percent of a class be in the society."
