into a combination of the two by omitting the dividing partition with arch.

Both front and rear doors enter vestibules and both have coat closets. Rear bedrooms have wardrobe closets and the front bedroom has a walk-in closet. A linen closet is located in the hall.

Dining space is provided for in the kitchen. The refrigerator is near the entrance, the sink under the corner windows while the stove is located nearest the dining areas with a work counter on each side.

The exterior is a colonial type with siding, shutters, face brick chimney and asphalt shingles.

The overall dimensions of the Conway are planned for 36 feet by 26 feet, with a total floor area of 1,082 and a cubage of 21,906 cubic feet.

Tar Heel Farmers Press Toward 2-Million-Acre Green Pasture Goal

North Carolina farmers, who were slow to take up the doctrine of pasture improvement, are making up for lost time. In 1950 they built their total of improved pastures to 800,000 acres—twice what they began the year with—and moved well along toward a goal of 2,000,000 acres. Their efforts are changing the face of the state and showing the way to broad opportunities in livestock production.

It wasn't always that way. As a matter of fact all of these 800,000 acres of improved pastures (which in this state means ladino clover) have been seeded since World War II. Between 1945 and 1948, only about 200,000 acres were seeded. Then the doctrine took hold, and in each of the next two years, the total was doubled.

Getting into high gear, however, was no overnight job. For years agricultural leaders had preached livestock development as a means to more diversification of an agricultural economy based heavily on tobacco and cotton.

Sharp impetus was given the program in the past year with organization of a "Green Pastures" campaign aimed at the 2,000,000-acre goal by the end of 1952. Co-operating are the Governor's office, all agricultural agencies, seedsmen, fertilizer dealers, farm machinery dealers, and bankers. Their watchword is ladino.

At Wake Forest, in northern Wake County, the W. W. Holding farm offers a striking example of what ladino can do for the pasture program. In mid-December, following the state's coldest fall in many years, Manager John Rich had the farm's dairy cows grazing contentedly in a pasture of ladino and fescue.

The pasture is a 20-acre plot which was seeded two years ago. That happened after Holding and Rich gave up on efforts to develop it as a natural pasture. In all, they have 200 acres of improved pasture, some in ladino-fescue and some in ladino-orchard grass. They seeded 60 acres more this past fall and plan to seed another 60 acres next fall. The pattern they follow is to start with alfalfa, followed by pasture seeding. In this way, Rich points out, the land provides income while the farm's herd is being built up.

There are 200 cows and calves—mostly dairy—on the farm. Holding's beef cattle, a sideline, live entirely on pasture. Rich plans to graze the dairy cows regularly throughout the winter. Up to mid-December, the cows had not missed a day on pasture, and up to the first of the month had had no grain at all. Then they began getting a supplemental daily ration of 10 pounds of dehydrated alfalfa and ground corn, cobs and shucks. Production was running at four gallons of milk per day per cow. In the spring, when the cows go back on pasture entirely (and Rich says that then you can't make them eat anything else), produc-
