mended in 1947, it became necessary to have a majority to win a city elective office. The question was bandied about during the 1947 election campaign, with the group supporting the amendments claiming a second race could be arranged under the state's general statutes. Another group, including a large segment of those who had opposed the charter amendments, contended that the lack of provision for a second race meant that an incumbent, even though he had not sought re-election, would be entitled and qualified to serve through another two-year term, should none of his potential successors receive a majority.

This result occurred in the Ward 4 Commissioner race of 1947. Candidates included John Henry Moss, H. C. Wilson, B. Hudson Bridges and the late Tracy McGinnis. Mr. Moss was high man, but he lacked a majority. Mr. Wilson, the runner-up did not complicate matters by calling for a second race, but the entering administration established one incident of precedent in handling the matter. W. M. Gantt, incumbent who had not offered for re-election, attended the swearing in ceremonies, then verbally resigned. The new commissioners, in turn, appointed Mr. Moss to fill Mr. Gantt's Ward 4 commissionership.

Currently, a similar situation could occur in races for mayor and for three of the five commissionerships, where more than two candidates are offering for mayor and Ward 2, 4, and 5 commissionerships.

Should Wednesday's effort meet the General Assembly deadline, all will be solved. If the General Assembly fails to pass the amendment, the evening of May 8, 1951, could prove a very interesting one.
