Some Veterans May Continue Training

Veterans who interrupted G. I. Bill studies at any time in the past, and later were called back to military service, will be permitted to continue training after discharge even though they get out after July 25 cut-off date for starting training, Veterans Administration said today in answer to a number of queries.

A veteran need not necessarily have interrupted his G. I. Bill course specifically for the purpose of going back into uniform, in order to be entitled to post-cut-off-date training, VA explained.

In all cases, however, conduct and progress must have been satisfactory, for further training to be authorized after military duty.

And in all cases, too, training after the deadline date must be resumed within a reasonable period of time after the veteran returns once again to civilian life and must be completed by July 25, 1956.

As an example of its ruling, VA cited the case of a veteran who interrupted G. I. Bill training along satisfactorily—in 1949 in order to take a temporary job. In 1950 he was recalled to active duty. Even though he gets out after the cut-off date, VA said, he would be eligible for further G. I. training, provided he had necessary entitlement for it.

VA stated that the July 25 cut-off date will apply to one class of World War II veterans who interrupted training to reenter service. That class consists of those who have been released from their second period of service before the July 25 date.

The July 25 cut-off date applies to veterans discharged before July 25, 1947. Those discharged from World War II after the 1947 date have four years from that discharge in which to start training.
