Tax Rate Down

The city board of commissioners did some whittling and changing around last week, adopted a record-high city budget, yet chopped the tax rate by 10 cents on the $100 valuation in finally setting the rate at $1.70.

The tax saving for the city's taxpayers is not a great one, amounting to about $6,500, but in a day when the only trend of tax rates has been upward, most citizens will applaud the action. It is the first slash in city tax rates in several

Question immediately follows as to whether the city will be able to 'come out" on its estimated figures and conduct a year's business in the black,

With anything like tight operation, it should, for there is about $12,000 surplus from the previous year's operation, according to the city clerk's figures, that was not figured into the new budget.

It is unfortunate that the city board did not not determine that it could cut the tax rate earlier, from the bookkeeping standpoint. Tax Supervisor Clar-ence Carpenter had just completed his work in figuring tax bills at the tentatively-set rate of $1.80. The double-check had balanced and the books were in good shape. The action of the board means that the tax supervisor has to start work all over again. In addition, extra work is, placed on the clerk's office, for refund checks must be mailed to citizens who have pre-paid their 1952 tax bills.

At the same time, it will be hard to find any taxpayer who objects to receiving a refund check, or who will object to a smaller bill when he does pay it. Similar concentration by other agencies of government should also be able to result in some shaving of other tax

Poor Accommodations

The Cleveland County grand jury recommended last week that the Superior Court condemn the City Jail for further occupancy until certain improvements to the accommodations were made. The judge, however, gave the city a stay of judgment, by his failure to act on the recommendation.

For several months the city has been aware of its needs in this department and noted it further by placing in the budget a $3,000 fund for improvements to the jail.

Some doubt that this is sufficient to improve the problem, since much of the problem is in the plumbing department: It is assumed that whatever necessary budget-switching is necessary will be done to get the sail in passable condi-

Back in the middle ages, there was no such institution as a decent jail of any kind, but thinking has advanced to require that certain basic necessities befurnished all human beings, regardless of their misdemeanors.

The city's accommodations for prisoners should be improved to comply with the sanitation laws.

It's reunion season. August is the month that crops are laid by and the farmer members of the various families have time for a bit of relaxation before the harvest season. There's nothing like a reunion to enhance the knowledge of the individual about his kinfolk, Families which don't have reunions should,

The Democratic Ticket

The conventions are over now, if not the bombast, and the Democrats have come up with a strong ticket, featuring the popular Illinois governor, Adlai Stevenson, and the able senator from Alabama, John Sparkman. What might have happened did not happen.

The extreme elements of the Democratic party did not prevail, and the Stevenson-Sparkman ticket represents a compromise of the basic and underlying differences which split the party in 1948 and which threatened to split it even worse in 1952.

There were some anxious moments at the opening, with the ultra-liberals, led by Franklin Roosevelt, Jr., Hubert Hum-phrey, and Blair Moody, seemingly taking over in fine fashion and adopting the attitude "our way and the others be damned." But this situation did not last for long, and the two people most responsible for it were 1) Sam Rayburn, the permanent chairman, and 2) Alben Barkley, the retiring vice-president.

Mr. Rayburn, a Texan and veteran speaker of the House, was determined to hold the party together, and he held it together, managing the convention from the chair perhaps better than any convention chairman ever has. At times he was very rough, particularly when he stared into the eyes of Senator Douglas, of Illinois, yet could not "see" him. But his roughness suited the South. Rayburn can be credited, almost singlehandedly, with seating the contested delegations from Virginia, South Caro-

Vice-President Barkley, in his stirring speech, did much to solidify the various divergent elements of the party.

The candidates are most acceptable and the fact that Sparkman comes from Alabama should mean that the Solid South will be just as solid come November. Governor Stevenson, though not as far left as President Truman, or his predecessor, is sufficiently liberal to satisfy, if not to delight, the "young Turks" who got their come-uppance.

For the first time since 1928, the Democratic party, in its selection of nominees, moved from left toward center.

On the record from sometime ago is this statement from Adlai Stevenson: "I don't like interference with free markets; free men, and free enterprise. I like freedom to succeed or fail. But I also know that there can be no real freedom without economic justice, social justice, equality of opportunity and a fair chance for every individual to make the most of himself."

That statement indicates a considerable movement away from the policy of ignoring the majority to please the

How will the vote go in November?

It will be some days yet before the pollsters get to operating in full fashion and thereby indicate the trend in the nation. But many feel that the nomination of the Illinois-Alabama team spells out another dry Leap Year for the GOP.

As this is written, the pro-split term patrons of Grover school appear to have won their right against the abandonment of this policy. It has been mighty hot this summer and, if such temperatures continue, it will be a safe bet that the youngsters won't learn much. It may be years, but someday, sometime, enough North Carolina farmers will put their children ahead of their pocketbooks and will approve the abandonment of the split term.

The DuPont Story

The death last week of Lam-mot DuPont reminded, if it was necessary, that this department had recently received a handsome quarto-size book from Harold Brayman, director of DuPont, but of America department entitled "DU-PONT The Autobiography of an American Enterprise".

It is a very excellent book to add to any library, and relates in its beautifully printed 138 pages the great story, not only of DuPont, but of American and its growth from a struggling weak confederation of colonies, to its 1952 status as producer for the world.

The book was published by DuPont to commemorate the sesqui-centennial anniversary of the founding of the company on the banks of the Brandywine River in Delaware in 1802. The founders were refugees from the unstable political tyranny then rampant in France, where, literally, it was quite possible to be a court favorite one day, and a marcher toward the guillotine the next. It worked both ways. A friend of the king of France could find himself in disfavor, or an anti-monarchist could quickly gain the enmity of his comrades. Unfortunately for France, the situation, over 150 years, has not yet stabilized. While the guillotine is relegated to the museums, the warring political factions still prevent stability and consequent continuity of t-d-s But this story is about Du-Pont and about America, of added interest to this area now because DuPont is a near-neighbor to the South at the now-abuilding H-bomb plant and Du-Pont, in turn, is already an employer of a number of Kings Mountain people.

The concurrent story of America-DuPont over the years is multitudinous in interesting detail, both historical and current. The story of DuPont is, first, the story of gunpowder, at the time of the founding of the company in 1802 a great American necessity. There were Indians to fight on the nearby frontiers, game to kill for food and clothing, forests to clear for planting lands.

DuPont not only represents smokeless powder, one of its first big inventive accomplishments, it represents cellophane (1927) which wraps many of the foods we eat every day. It represents household cement, the modern lacquers which grace your automobile, plastics, rayon, which eliminated the American woman's dependence on the Japanese stlkworm, and for the wonderful 1938 invention, nylon. How could a woman live without nylon? She once did, of course. Before the stiff collar went into limbo. DuPont helped out with a washable celluloid job. t-d-s

The book gives almost as much attention to the other developments of the nation, as it does to DuPont and its accomplishments.

Underlying theme of the work, which in credited to no one author but to many, is the success wrought by the cooperation between the working man and enlightened management. In early 1800, the making of gunpowder was even more dangerous than it is today. It was not unusual for a plant to blow with resultant loss of life and limb. DuPont had explosions. What is believed to be one of the earliest pension funds was the DuPont "widows and orphans" account of 1819. Though the company at that time was heavily in debt, Du-Pont pensioned the widows and gave them houses in which to live. Throughout the book, stories from records recount the names of men who started with the company at groundfloor level, to rise later to top positions of management and responsibility.

t-d-s If the book points up any particular moral, it seems to be this: men of vision, energy and courage can always conquer greater fields. DuPont, from its humble beginnings on the banks of the Brandywine, has been blessed with men of vision and nerve. Underlying the operations of this company has always been a daring that refused to relax and stagnate in the accomplishments of the past, a synonym for self-satisfaction. Always, DuPont has pushed ahead. Investments were made in research that did not work out. But always DuPont was willing to try again. Had it not been for this policy, the company would not have grown to the great firm it is. It still expects to grow and to cut out Lucky You

AVERT SUICIDE IN SOUTH CHARLOTTE OBSERVER

The Democratic National Conention showed sound judgment

in selecting a ticket that has a good chance to win. From the standpoint of practical politics, Stevenson is almost the only candidate who could have been chosen without throwing the election Senator Sparkman was also as sible summer garb, At first, only

We are happy, therefore, that the convention showed such good judgment as to select the man whom we consider next best after Russell. It could have done very much worse.

The Democrats now have a ticket that can give some real opposition to the strong Republican slate of Eisenhower and Nixon. Stevenson, by not campaigning for the nomination, by not asking for the support of any delegation even that of his own state by insisting that he was not a candidate until the nomination was actually handed to him - by this dignified conduct he has done everything a man could do to avoid going into the campaign with the Truman brand on his

Everyone who has read this page knows how we feel about Fruman. We have expressed disgust at his whole record, at his demagoguery, at his cheap and dishonest politics, and at his unholy alliances for political advantage with left wingers, out-andout Socialists, and corrupt city and state machines. We did not want the South to be an accomplice, before or after the fact, of putting this gang of self-serving opportunists again in control of the country.

For that reason we think the development of a two-party system in the South would be the most shealthful improvement in American politics. If that is to be achieved, the Democratic party must not be allowed to commit suicide in the South. With the A. D. A., the CIO, and other leftwingers temporarily in control at Chicago, it was about to do just that. Fortunately, wiser heads prevailed
