Soil-Sampling Procedures Changes Made

Two changes have been made in procedures for submitting samples of soil for testing by the soil sampling laboratory of the State Department of Agriculture, according to Howard Clapp, Cleveland County farm agent for the State College Extension Service.

Mr. Clapp emphasized that by early sampling farmers will be assured of having soil test results and recommendations before placing next year's order for lime and fertilizer.

The changes in the procedure follow:

There have been two changes in the procedure for getting soil samples tested. First, the information blank has been revised. This new sheet is designed to give more information on soil type, drainage, slope, and crop rotations to be followed. This information will be used to help interpret soil test results as a partial substitute for subsol samples. Therefore, it is very important that these blanks be filled in as completely as possible.

Second, subsol samples are no longer necessary. To obtain a soil sample that will be representative of the area you want tested take a small uniform core (or slice) of soil from the surface to a depth of about 6 inches in 15 or 20 spots. All of these cores should be combined or put in one box and properly labeled. Small areas that differ in color, texture or drainage should be avoided or sampled separately. More complete instructions are given on the back of the new information sheet.

Soil testing should be considered on a crop rotation basis where possible. Sampling soils every 3 to 5 years or once during the rotation cycle is sufficient to maintain an adequate lime level and make necessary adjustments in fertilization practices.

Poultry Pastures Are Described In Folder

Acres of pastures dotted with chickens are destined to become as common, if not as artistic, as pictures of contented cattle against lush green backgrounds.

Pastures for chickens are also profitable. A new State College Extension Service publication, entitled "Grazing Crops for Poultry," points out that pastures have meant savings in feed bills of from 6 to 14 per cent, depending on the protein content of the ration fed and the feeding program followed.

The folder discusses range management. Ladino clover, alfalfa, lespedeza, soybeans, ryegrass and crimson clover are pastures for poultry and presents a readable chart giving the North Carolina areas these plants and five grasses that may be grown and the date of growth.

Ladino clover seems to be widely adapted and meets all the requirements for a good poultry cover crop, according to the publication. It recommends planting of one for every 300 chickens or 100 turkeys. Directions are given for planting this legume.

The folder may be obtained from your local county agent or by writing to the Publications Department, N. C. State College, Raleigh, for Extension Folder no. 94.

Cotton-Picking Costs At All-Time High

RALEIGH - North Carolina cotton growers are paying the highest wages in history for harvesting the current crop, it was disclosed today by the State-Federal Crop Reporting Service. The report also showed that rates per hundred pounds for the United States as a whole are the highest they have ever been.

Based on estimates up to November 1, the Crop Reporting Service placed this year's average rate in North Carolina at $3.50 per hundred pounds as compared with $3.35 per hundred pounds up to November 1 last year. The average rate for the Nation is $3.05 this year compared with $3 in 1951.

The North Carolina rate is third highest of the cotton-producing states compared with Missouri's rate of $3.55 and California's average of $3.60.

With very few exceptions, statistics pointed out, costs for picking cotton by hand have consistently increased during the past 10 years since 1931 when the average rate in North Carolina was 15 cents per hundred pounds.

County Agent Says Dollar Value Lower

If you have trouble making cheap dollars pay-bills, you'll be interested in knowing just what the dollar is worth today. The cost of things people buy hit a new high in August, 1952, which means the value of the dollar hit a new low.

In comparison with the 1953-39 period the dollar today is worth 52 cents, says Howard Clapp, Cleveland county farm agent for the State College Extension Service. In 1947 the buying power of a dollar was 63 cents, and ten years ago the figure was 86 cents.

"This is inflation," says Clapp. "The number of dollars in circulation has increased faster than the supply of things that dollars buy. Inflation doesn't affect all commodities or all people alike. Some gain while others lose. Inflation helps to redistribute the wealth but it does not mean a real gain in the national standard of living."

"The only way to really improve our standard of living," Mr. Clapp points out, "is by increasing our production. Production is standard of living. What we produce is what we consume."
