and SOCIAL SECURITY

By Leola M. Byrty, Field Representative, Social Security Office

Four out of five of the widows (or wives) and children in this country are protected by old-age and survivors insurance, according to Miss Margaret Lowder, manager of the Gastonia office of the Social Security Administration.

Miss Lowder points out that, while the original Social Security Act provided monthly benefits for the wage earner only, the present law provides such a wide variety of insurance benefits that practically everyone normally dependent upon the wage earner for support is protected by this insurance. The face value of the life insurance protection afforded by social security is approximately $275 billion.

Monthly benefits ranging from $25 to $85 per month are provided for eligible workers who retire at any time after reaching age 65. Payments are also provided for the dependent wife, child, or husband of the retired worker.

In addition, the law provides for the payment of benefits to survivors of insured workers who die, regardless of the worker's age at the time of death. Miss Lowder lists the following types of survivors who may qualify for monthly benefits: unmarried children under 18 years of age, widows who have reached the age of 65, widows under 65 who are caring for children and in some cases dependent parents. The average payment to a widow and two children is $130.00 a month, but in some cases the total family benefits amount to as much as $168.75 a month, which is the maximum permitted under the law. In addition to monthly benefits, lump-sum death payments, ranging from $75 to $225.00, are also provided.
