ANSWERS

TIMELY FARM QUESTIONS

QUESTION: Can I transplant small apple tree this summer?

ANSWER: It can be done, but most often it's better to wait until cold weather. If you must transplant it now, you will have to dig a ball of dirt with the roots being careful not to disturb too many of them. Hot weather transplanting also requires constant care. The plant should mulched and kept well watered. It may not live even then.

QUESTION: What are the plants I have to watch out for in pastures?

ANSWER: North Carolina has thousands of kinds of flowering plants, but only about 50 to 60 are poisonous. Of these, 10 seem to be responsible for most livestock deaths. They are commonly known as: White Snakeroot, Lambkill, Kalmia, Mountain-laurel, Black Cherry and Common Chokeberry, Spotted Water-hemlock, Carolina Jessamine, Yellow Buckeye, Crow-poison and Pink Deathcamas.

Bridges Named Contest Winner

NEW YORK — Lawrence Bridges, 116, South Gaston st., Kings Mountain, N. C., has contributed an idea to the "I'd-Like-to-See-Them-Make" column of Popular Science Monthly for June. Mr. Bridges would like the job of grass-cutting made easier by having fences that could be raised. Sections of the fence, riding on tracks in the supporting posts, could be raised and lowered, thus eliminating the tedious job of edge trimming, Mr. Bridges says.

The Central high school tenth grade student is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Woodrow H. Bridges of 26 South Gaston Street.

For his contribution to the Popular Science Monthly, he received $5.

Twister Disrupts AF Headquarters

Major Charles C. Oates, commanding officer of Flight "C" 9942nd VART squadron has announced that air force reservists throughout the South have been asked to delay correspondence with Headquarters, Fourteenth Air Force, until June 20.

The delay is requested because of temporary dislocation of Air Force Reserve personnel records caused by the tornado that swept through Robbins Air Force base earlier this month.

The administrative moratorium was administered by Major General C. E. Thomas, Jr., commanding General of the Fourteenth Air Force in a personal appeal to some 65,000 reserve officers and airmen whose records are housed at Robbins Air Force base. General Thomas said "The twister ripped two Fourteenth Air Force buildings which contained reservists' personal files, demolishing one building and severely damaging the other. Many records were damaged, particularly those of airmen and it will take some time for regrouping of the records."

He asked that reservists delay their correspondence in order to speed reorganization of the Reserve personnel offices. During the moratorium period General Thomas assured reservists that emergency personnel actions would be expedited and cautioned that completion of administrative actions begun prior to the storm would be delayed.

County Agent Gives Hog Feeding Hints

"Is it gold or pork?" John Morley of the Unaka community of Cherokee County wasn't sure after he figured up the cost of dry feeding his family pork supply. He has just finished investing $87 in wheat shorts in growing out a single 275-pound hog.

G. H. Farley, county agent for the N. C. State College Agricultural Extension Service, says Morley tells this story:

He was sure there must be a less expensive way to feed out a hog. Morley's next porker was put on a diet of prepared hog fattening ration. The result was a total investment of $64. This was better, but still not too good. Morley knew he could fatten a pig cheaper.

He planted an acre of U. S. 282 corn, fertilized it with 500 pounds of 5-10-10 at planting. When it was 24 inches tall he sidedressed it with 200 pounds of ammonium nitrate. He had to hire a neighbor to do the plowing and cultivating, but this cost him only $8. Then he planted two bushels of soybeans and fertilized these with 10 bags of 0-14-14. His total cost amounted to only $54!

"Water was available in the field, so when the beans began to mature he put five pigs on the one acre with specific instructions 'to gather their own or starve.' The pigs went to work on the beans. By the time the soybeans were about gone the pigs had grown large enough to efficiently use a maximum amount of corn.

Farley says Morley "harvested" 1,250 pounds of pork from his acre of corn and soybeans with practically no labor at all—and with expenses kept to bare minimum. "Needless to say," the county agent chuckles, "Morley is now a 'hoggin down' enthusiast."

Negro Supplements Income On Turkeys

Junious Fennell of Kerr, Route 1, a Negro farmer with a flare for raising turkeys, earned about $1,200 net last year by raising turkeys on shares. By using good management practices the mortality rate was kept very low. Fennell started with 937 birds and raised more than 900. The turkeys sold for $2,400. He plans to do the same thing again this year. "The extra income really comes in handy," he says, "but we got a little tired of eating turkey."
