Kings Mountain National Guard Gets War Taste

FT. McCELLAN, ALA. — Choccoloco Corridor, a hot dusty gap in the mountain range to the East of this spot, once again became a battle field for two regiments, the 119th and the 120th, of the 30th "Old Hickory" Division as Aggressor Maneuvers began here today. Kings Mountain's Hq. & Hq. Co., is a unit of the 120th Infantry Regiment.

Umpled by regular Army instructors. In co-operation with the intelligence and operations sections of the division, the maneuvers are designed to give the men most of the effects of warfare without the actual use of ammunition. All troops will be in the field until Thursday.

Before leaving the comforts of the fort for the mountain ridges, the men enjoyed a full weekend which included a division parade, the first elimination rounds of a 106-team softball tournament, a division-wide revival, a steak dinner, and numerous special services-entertainments.

In the novel religious revival, a total of 68 Guardsmen professed a serious interest in Religion, even though the feature service was rained out on Sunday evening. The two morning services were well attended. Col. John M. Fain, a lay evangelist from Atlanta, and Major General Paul H. Jordan, division commander, conducted the services.

Governor Frank G. Clements of Tennessee, the youngest governor in the nation, was the honor guest at the Saturday parade which included the entire 7500-member division.

For the field soldiers, the weekend brought respite from the first toll of the encampment and set them up for the second weeks action, which is always the hardest.

Main figures in the division are at First Presbyterian church here, and Mrs. Paul Mauney, of Kings Mountain, is one of the counselors.

Rev. J. Eade Anderson, pastor of Olney Presbyterian Church, Gastonia, and former Kings Mountain supply pastor, is vesper speaker.

Members of Senior high fellowship groups from Kings Mountain and Grover are attending the camp.
