Political activity stayed underground during the past week, though there was a notable quickening over the weekend, perhaps due to the increased business activity occasioned by the Mother's Day observance. Then it quietened again. Candidates, for the most part, seemed to be relying on personal appearances at factory gates, tours of business districts, and other personal appeals to the voters, Several candidates have placed card-type advertising in the Herald, and several political managers have been seen in the city contacting workers. But, as the long-term political observers say, "the people ain't talking it".

The headline attraction beween Senator Alton Lennon and Former Governor Kerr Scott for the U.S. Senate seat also remains much quieter than folk can remember. A county political leader told the Herald Wednesday "It's the quietest I've ever seen
