WILDLIFE

Nature Feature

By National Wildlife Federation

The name anemone is applied to some plants as well as to animals. Here we refer to some of the animals known as sea anemones of which there are approximately 1,000 known species. With such a number of kinds of sea anemones it is only natural that there will be considerable variation.

One of the commonest sea anemones found along the Atlantic Coast of North America is Metridium dianthus which has worldwide distribution around the Arctic region extending as far south as New Jersey and being most abundant and of largest size in the area between New Jersey and the Bay of Fundy. In that area it is found on piles, in tidal pools, among the rocks from low tide mark on to depths of 150 feet.

On the West Coast this same species is found from Sitka south to Santa Barbara, California. This sea anemone varies greatly in size. Normally those found by beach combers are at most only a few inches high or wide but one dredged from a depth of 50 fathoms off our Pacific Coast filled a 10-gallon crock. Usually there is a smooth velvety column about 4 inches high and 3 inches thick. This is crowned with an expandable disc covered with a multitude of many waving tentacles. In large specimens the number of tentacles may be well over a thousand. When expanded the disc may look something like a chrysanthemum colored chocolate brown, streaked or blotched with brown or even white. When the animal is disturbed it quickly contracts the disc and seems to swallow itself since the tentacles all quickly disappear into the animal.

When an animal is being eaten by the sea anemone its fate may be sudden. When a hungry sea anemone is fed a chiton the flesh may all be consumed and the shell expelled within a period of 15 minutes. The animals have been kept active and healthy in aquaria for over a half century and there is no reason to believe that at the end of this period animals so kept could be considered decadent.

Sea anemones may reproduce by simply splitting longitudinally into two or more animals, by budding at the base, or by breaking off fragments of the base, or sexually. When reproducing sexually, eggs are fertilized by sperms. These fertilized eggs give rise to free-swimming larvae that move about and eventually settle down more or less permanently attached to some solid support. Some sea anemones attach themselves to the backs of crabs and thus get moved about increasing the area from which they may collect their own food.

The crabs that carry these sea anemones get protection in return for their efforts since the sea anemones with their waving tentacles are able to injure attacking animals. The poison barb in a tentacle of a sea anemone is something that most animals learn to avoid no matter where the anemone may be found.

The graceful movement of the tentacle-bearing discs of sea anemones have appealed to motion picture photographers and some spectacularly beautiful motion pictures have been made of them. An understanding of the role of sea anemones in the general scheme of things is worth having.

Three Are Arrested For Motor Miscues
Miss Shirley Dover, 17, of route 1, Kings Creek, S. C., was arrested Sunday on U. S. Highway 29 South by State Highway Patrolman C. D. Fortune and charged with operating a vehicle without driving license and maintaining improper brakes.
Arrested along with Miss Dover and charged with permitting an unlicensed operator to drive a vehicle were J. D. Moses, owner of the vehicle, and Furman Love, passenger in the car. Both are also from route 1, Kings Creek, S. C.
Trial for the three defendants has been set for September 3, county recorder's court, Shelby.

CARD OF THANKS
We sincerely appreciate the many acts of kindness and sympathy shown us, and for the beautiful floral offering, in the death of our father and husband, May God's richest blessings rest upon you all.
Mrs. George Ivey Womack and Family.
