Bible Comment:
Early Christians Had Difficult Interpretive Task

THE early Christian writers had the task of explaining the Christian faith in relation to the religion in which many of the disciples had been brought up. In the thoughts of Paul and other Christian writers, there was no breach between Judaism and Christianity.

They thought of their Christian experience as a fulfillment of the faith and practice to which they had been accustomed.

Deep in this former faith and practice had been the emphasis upon blood sacrifice. It was part of the Jewish ritual. In common with almost all religions, the conception of blood sacrifice and blood covenant played an essential part.

Then came the sacrifice of Christ upon the cross, and the Christian teaching relating this sacrifice to the Jewish ritual and practice. This, in the Christian thought, marked a new covenant.

The salvation of men was no longer to be won by the shedding of the blood of sacrificial animals. Salvation was rather through the sacrifice of Christ.

This is a lesson of mystery which it is not easy either to understand or to explain. A great theologian has said, "What Christ is on the cross, God eternally is."

The idea of Christianity and of the New Testament is that for our salvation no sacrifice is needed but that of a sincere and contrite heart.

God is not to be appeased. He is Himself through Christ the appeaser, inviting us to receive His grace and accept the sacrifice made through love.
