Preliminary government assays estimate the mineral content of the rock under Barrett's pasture at 40 per cent for each ton of earth.
Officials of the Roanoke Rock Wool Company have been interested in the Barrett land for over a year.
By-products of the refining process of the ore leaves a fluffy, porous rock compound which is fireproof and ideal as an insulating material in rock wool insulations.
Gallium, refined, is used in experimental nuclear work and is noted for its explosive characteristics.
Rubidium is a silver-colored mineral which explodes when mixed with water.
Titanium, lighter and stronger than aluminum, is extremely malleable and is used primarily as an alloy with steel or other metals. Its lightness, strength and non-corrosive elements make it valuable construction of rocket frames and skins.
Mining Engineer Samuel Howard said the deposit is the largest he has seen and chances are the vein will cover a large area north of Waco.
Government surveyors said the area could yield 200 tons of ore each day with a life span of 100 years before depletion.
Both gallium and rubidium presently sell for around $3,600 per ton, but Engineer Howard said the price will drop considerably if the deposit proves to be as extensive as he believes it to be.
