

School And Your Child

MORE ADULTS THAN YOUNGERS ARE ATTENDING SCHOOL. More grown-ups go to school today than all youngsters put together, reports Dr. Lee Reynolds of Appalachian State Teachers College, Boone, N. C.

In a recent year 58 million adults engaged in some type of education activity, compared with 41 million persons enrolled for elementary, secondary and college instruction, the Appalachian education professor points out.

This may mean that education today is replacing "things" as a symbol of one's importance, or as a means of self-fulfillment, opines Dr. Reynolds.

In fact, "it is already known that automobiles are losing their punch as symbols," says Dr. Daniel R. Davies, education professor at Columbia University's Teacher College.

Cars look too much alike, the professor claims.

Dr. Davies sees strong evidence that the acquisition of things of any sort is increasingly giving way to efforts to expand individually, to devote time and money to a "pursuit of learning."

In other words, for real distinction one must know more.

This changing American taste for learning, plus technological developments, fast-changing world conditions, and expanding populations account largely for the recent tremendous expansion in adult education, explains the Columbia scholar.

Doctors, for example, return to school periodically for up-to-date briefings on new drugs, diagnostic procedures, and remedial techniques.

Mechanics must attend schools to keep up with new developments.

Even top corporation executives sit in special college courses to learn the latest business techniques.

Churches and numerous other organizations send members to various schools to keep them better informed.

And thousands attend day and night classes on their own just to satisfy a hunger, which increases with maturity, for liberal education. They yearn to know more about history, art, and literature.

Many of these folks have perceived that the chromium ornaments on their autos don't represent any personal accomplishment. Rather, they are the handiwork of skilled designers and builders, made possible to the average owner through the creation of an "installment" type of financing.

Knowledge, not ownership of things, really gives one a greater sense of personal accomplishment, they have learned.

And not only is education the style nowadays, it is a necessity if one is to stay atop in business.

Dr. Reynolds of Appalachian State points out that most of America's six million unemployed have learned that "a person with only muscles to sell is certainly a lost individual today."

"And the ironic thing," explains Dr. Reynolds, "is that there are five million jobs opened without people to fill them—but the jobs require skilled and trained folks.

Actually there'd be no unemployment problem if those without jobs could be trained, says Appalachian State's Dr. Reynolds.

Training centers such as those established at Gastonia and Hickory mark the beginning of an answer to the problem, Dr. Reynolds feels.

In the stampede for education, what are the favorite adult studies?

"Everything and anything," reports Dr. Davies.

For example, in a group of 15 families living in a suburban village, the professor found seven adults engaged in the following education activities:

Person One, a Ph.D. who directs a research lab, attending a two-week conference sponsored by his industry on new research problems and techniques.

Person Two, a young interior decorator with a personal adjustment problem, enrolled in a psychology course in a nearby college.

Person Three, a mother whose children had grown and who wanted to finish work on a teacher's certificate begun years ago, studying in a teachers' college as a part-time student.

Person Four, a homemaker, learning flower arranging in a local high school adult education class.

Person Five, an engineer responsible for the training of new employees for a large public utility corporation, taking a course in teaching and learning in a university as a part-time student because he felt inadequate as a teacher.

Person Six, a young girl who had finished high school and was living at home pending outcome of the courting process, continuing private home piano lessons and working on a secretarial course.

Person Seven, an enthusiastic scoutmaster, tackling a long series of courses by the local Boy Scout Council to win his honorary key.

Dr. Davies salutes this American zest for adult education. He considers it to be "one of the most effective ways to improve individuals and a society of free people."

Telephone Talk

by
FLOYD FARRIS
Your Telephone Manager

MOST FOLKS ARE familiar with the part our telephone servicemen play in providing good telephone service. You might not know, though, that a telephone serviceman can serve in another very important way, if the need arises. Throughout the Bell System, more than 165,000 employees—including approximately 60,000 telephone servicemen—hold first aid certificates! Each man's truck or trailer contains a well-equipped first aid kit, ready to use.

IT'S FALL AGAIN and there's so much to do—places to go—people to see. And more and more people are finding that shopping by phone is a good way of saving time and energy to do the things that need doing. Many stores today offer a telephone shopping service... their ads in the paper and the Yellow Pages of your telephone directory keep you in touch. So, next time you're in a rush, don't forget the biggest time-saver of all: your telephone.

REMEMBER, TOO, when you have a minute to spare... and when you can't spare a minute, THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A HANDY EXTENSION PHONE!

"INFORMATION . . . ARE YOU SURE?"
Don't be surprised if information give you a number with seven numerals and no letters. It may sound strange at first. But it's the new kind of number we'll all have in the future.

Meanwhile, if you call Information for the number of anyone in Grover or Shelby who has moved recently, you may find they've been given a seven-digit number. This is one of the first steps locally in the change to "All Number Calling." This new numbering system will permit telephone service to keep pace with population growth and increasing telephone usage.

About this question:
I often read about car thefts but I never struck home. Last night it was my car. Unless it shows up, I'll be out $2400. Is it true that about $10 would have bought theft, fire and glass breakage protection for a full year?
