Weed Seed Planting Ideas
 By H. R. Clapp
 County Agricultural Agent
 "We planting weed seed! You're crazy!"
 Maybe. But, take a look at the findings of a seed box survey made by the N. C. Department of Agriculture in the fall of 1960: Seventy five per cent of Tar Heel grain producers planted non-certified seed in 1960. It was seed, which, for the most part, hadn't been tested for purity and germination. And it was mostly untreated seed.
 "A great many producers planted their grain fields in weeds," says Foll McLaughlin, assistant director of the N. C. Crop Improvement Association at State College.
 The survey showed there was 56 times as much weed seed in non-certified seed as a "pluetagged" (certified) seed; 27 times as much seed of crops other than what the producer thought he was planting; 129 seeds of noxious weed per pound in non-certified seed.
 A third of oat producers planted without knowing the variety. "Most of the bad grain seed planted in the state comes from neighbors of the producers," says McLaughlin. "The farmer's neighbor is his worst source of seed, usually."
 For 75 cents more an acre, the small grain producer can insure that he'll get a good crop of grain. That's all it costs to buy certified and treated seed.
 "A yield of just one bushel more per acre will pay the difference," McLaughlin points out.
 Chances are the yield will be far better than that. In South Carolina last year, experimental Shrubbery planted, $300 down payment. Q & Q CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, Shelby, N. C. Telephone HU 2-1800. 9:28 tfn
