Remember when?

IT wasn't so long ago at that. Before 1939, the sight of a steam engine on the Southern wouldn't rate a second glance. There was no other kind to see. Yet, fourteen years later, on June 17, 1953, we "pulled the fire" on our last steam locomotive in service and became the first major railroad in America to be 100% dieselized. That was a great day for the Southern — and for the South.

But all that is history now. We believe in looking ahead to what has to be done, not back to what has been done. And, looking ahead, we can see challenging new opportunities to increase our usefulness to our customers — and to the South.

Our approach to a policy of increased usefulness is through rigid control of all our own costs... more efficient services and better methods... and innovations in the design of freight cars which lower the shippers' packaging, handling and transportation costs. Our goal is to offer the most useful services possible at the lowest possible prices.

Much already has been done. Much more will be done. For all of us on Southern Railway are making an extra effort to increase our usefulness to those we serve. All in the South will benefit. And so will we.
