City, Industry Urged To Clean

The City of Kings Mountain, which took action last January to protect the Buffalo Creek watershed area as a future source of water supply, along with industries of the area, have a considerable financial stake in the recent report of the state stream sanitation committee on the Broad River basin.

Polluted Streams

City officials and others concerned have been invited to attend a public hearing on the report at Shelby high school on July 12.

Specifically, the report reads, "The City of Kings Mountain should employ the services of competent consulting engineers for the purpose of planning and installing adequate and efficient treatment facilities for the sewage and industrial wastes originating in the City, in order that the beneficial uses made of the receiving streams will be preser-James J.
