Fashion Designers Giving New Name To Housedress; Now Leisure Dress

Fashion designers have turned their talents to glamorizing the housedress.

They've not only given it new styling, but a new name: the leisure dress. Regardless of what the name implies, it's ideal for doing housework and it's the happiest combination of comfort and flattering style to come on the fashion scene in a long time.

The new leisure dresses are loose and unrestricting shifts, inspired by the muu muu moved from the beach to the house and stayed there. They come in the gayest colors and prints you can imagine. Some button down the front or wrap around and button. Others are straight shifts that slip over the head, with wide shits at the sides of the skirt to allow freedom of movement.

The National Cotton Council reports that fabrics for the new leisure dresses range from soft cotton Terry cloth to linen-textured cottons. Satens and sarahs put cotton in a glamour girl role for indoor fashions. Glorious colors, artistic patterns, and shimmering surfaces give them a silky look, yet they're lightweight, cool, and comfortable.

As elegant as they are, all of these cotton variations can go into the washing machine... and many of them will come out of the dryer or off the clothes line, ready to put on again with little or no ironing.
