MORE ABOUT Tax Appraisals

iel's point was that the county government has sole responsibility for valuing property for tax purposes in conformance with state law. In other words, a city copies on its tax books the identical valuations found on the county tax books.

County Tax Supervisor Max Hamrick said Monday that, while complaints are being voiced, the volume has not been great. He also noted that citizens who feel they have legitimate complaints should visit his office and make the complaint formal through filling out a blank form available for that purpose. He added, "And we have people to help prepare the complaints."
Once a formal complaint has been filed, he added, a hearing will be scheduled by the commission, if possible at the convenience of the taxpayer. Should a person not be able to attend the scheduled hearing, he'll be heard at a future time.

"The door won't be closed to anyone," Mr. Hamrick added. Should a taxpayer note a computation or mathematical error, it will be corrected by the tax supervisor, when called to his attention. In other words, a hearing with the board won't be necessary.

As noted in the notice of valuation, any taxpayer may examine his own or any other appraisal on file.

One Kings Mountain citizen reported he found one lot more than trebled in taxable value, two others more than doubled. Another citizen laughed that
